Growing Food

SOME boys actually outgrow their stomachs. Fact —they're growing so fast and playing so hard that they can't keep up with the tax without being "regular little pigs"—as you call them—about their eating.

So they overeat on tired little stomachs—and along comes indigestion, sometimes sore throat ("stomach throat"), loss of appetite, pale cheeks. Doctor says "tonic"—Doctors who've had experience with it say

To Answer These Messages

1. Reply in a stamped envelope, unsealed, and with the number of the message in a corner. (For instance, 250-A.) Enclose this in an outer envelope and mail it to Vogue. Do not telephone—all communications must be through the mails. Post-cards not accepted.

2. Send Vogue no money—wait until the other woman writes to you.

3. If her letter is satisfactory, then send Vogue your money order or certified check for the amount agreed upon. We will have the article sent to you, and will keep your money on deposit until you instruct us to send it.

4. Never send any article to Vogue. The advertiser pays the expressage on articles sent for inspection—the one inspecting pays the return expressage if the article does not suit.

To Insert Your Message

When you wish to sell something which you do not need—or to buy something which you do need—send your message to Sales and Exchanges. The price is $2 for 25 words, or less. Additional words, 10 cents each. Check or money order must accompany message; be sure to write your name and address very plainly. Your message for the July 15th Vogue should be received on or before June 10th. Address all communications to Sales and Exchanges Service, Vogue, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York.

A PAGE OF UNUSUAL OFFERINGS

This page was established four years ago, for the convenience of readers who wished to dispose privately of superfluous belongings—gowns, hats, jewelry, furniture, pictures, and so forth. Vogue soon found that there are many women whose storerooms are overcrowded with things of this kind—in good condition, but not wanted by their owners. The number of messages on this page has grown so rapidly, and the offerings are so varied, that no page in Vogue is now more interesting or colorful.

Here, for instance, is a list of articles of every variety. Gowns in all sizes and styles—and most of them at surprisingly low prices. A thoroughbred bulldog, a furnished apartment for the summer, a Turkish rug, and a hand-made white lace parasol—just to mention a few of them, taken at random.

Then there is a Spanish lace wedding-veil, a hundred years old, which might find interest in the home of some bride-to-be. Notice also the unusual opportunities of securing a home for the summer. If you prefer to stay in New York, there are furnished apartments for rent; if you are going to the country, a cottage in Maine might interest you.

The best of it is, these articles have the personal quality that is so hard to find in the shops. In all this amazing variety there must be something of special interest to you. Why not write to the owner? She will be glad to send you particulars. Moreover, if you happen to want something you don't find here, a little "want" message is almost certain to find the woman who can supply it. Read the rules at the head of this page, and notice that your name is not made public at any stage of the transaction.

Special Prices on Midsummer Models

Tailored Linen dresses are more prominent than ever this season. As a morning dress or as a sporting costume for Country Club or Casino wear, they are already tremendously popular. Two unusually smart models are shown here.

Narragansett. A new model in excellent Linen. That the tunic skirt is coming back has been prophesied on every hand. Here it is, at last, in a delightful variation, longer in front and back than on the sides. The waist is trimmed with hemstitching and crochet buttons. The Organdie collars and cuffs have a Quaker-like simplicity that makes this dress an extremely popular model. In the favorite colors, Blue, Pink or White. Sizes 36 to 44. Special at..... $9.50

Southampton. Of unusually good Linen, well tailored throughout. The simple waist is softened with fine Embroidered Batiste vestee, overlapping a band of Linen, and new Batiste collar. The hemstitching in novel lines and fancy corded buttons add just enough trimming for this season's tailored modes. The skirt is the new flare model so effective in crisp Linen. Two large envelope pockets are "as useful as they are ornamental." A very becoming model, and one which will not soon lose its style. In Pink, Blue or White. For Misses. Sizes 16-18-20. Specially priced at..... $7.50

Bar Harbor. A strikingly effective model is this dress of heavy "Candy Stripe" Crepe, made with bretelle waist. The blouse waist is of voile, trimmed on the collars and vest with Embroidery, and with unique colored buttons to match. The flare skirt has a pointed yoke, showing an unusual and very becoming arrangement of the stripes. The white kid belt gives a very trim appearance. This costume is really exceptional in the excellence of the material and in the striking originality of the model. In White striped in Blue, Rose or Black. Sizes 36 to 44. Special at..... $11.75

Asbury. One cannot have too many afternoon dresses for the warm summer days. This model would be noticeable among any number, it is so new. Of white novelty Voile, one of the prettiest materials of the season. The waist is made in the latest bolero style in front—suggesting an Eton jacket. The vestee and collar are of fine white Batiste embroidered in color. Cuffs of the same material finish the short kimona sleeves. The peplum on the skirt is a unique way of giving the short-waisted line. The skirt has three deep tucks, giving the necessary swing. Girdle is of rich velvet in color to match. White only, trimmed with deep blue, rose or black. Sizes 16-18-20. Special at..... $6.95

Newport. Airy and fluffy, as a summer party-dress should be—this model of fine white Voile makes an ideal frock for a young girl. The new "baby" waist is very effectively trimmed with a fine net lace insertion and fine tucks. The soft, ruffled vestee is of fine white net. Notice the new double collar. The full graceful skirt is trimmed with the net lace and with bands of net, like the quaint footing of our grandmother's day now revived in the very latest models. This open effect makes this one of the prettiest skirts for dancing the season has shown. The girdle and the original "Cherry Drop" buttons are of colored satin. Colors, cherry, blue or rose. For Misses. Sizes 16-18-20. Special at..... $10.95

Berkshire. The all-white dress is very little seen this season. One must have even a touch of color to be correct. This model shows an extremely effective way of introducing color, in the combination of fine white Voile and a novelty Voile striped in color. The bolero-effect waist is formed of the striped Voile joined with fine hemstitching, and the yoke and bands of the stripe. The vest front is finely tucked. Notice particularly the new loose sleeve. The skirt has plenty of fullness, and yet so cleverly is it designed that it gives a delightfully slender effect around the hips. Lavishly trimmed with large white crochet buttons. The girdle is of Black Velvet. White striped in corn, blue, rose or black. Sizes 36 to 44. Unusual offer at..... $12.50

I Can Help Make You More Beautiful and Fascinating I Will Prove It Free

I can help you retain your most valuable asset—a youthful appearance. If you are growing faded and wrinkled or looking old at 25 or 30, I will prove to you free that I can help you recover your bygone charms quickly and easily. If you have an ugly complexion, wrinkles, thin hair or rough hands, write me today. Send no money. I will assist you awhile free.

Age has become largely a question of keeping the muscles of the cheeks from sagging. This sagging changes the whole contour of a woman's face giving it an extremely aged look. A woman is as old as she looks. It is a disadvantage to appear 40 when she is only 30.

Scores of valuable beauty secrets together with many valuable beauty-making formulas are fully explained in my Three Courses of Instruction on "How to Become Beautiful, Fascinating and Attractive."

How to whiten and soften the skin.
How to make yourself charming and attractive.

How to beautify your eyebrows and eyelashes and thereby make your eyes more alluring.

How to promote hair growth and make your hair soft and fluffy and keep it in curl for practically a week at a time.

How to overcome a shiny nose.

How to be sure that the face cream and other toilet products that you use are not harmful to your skin and complexion.

How to use rouge so that no one will detect it.

How to give your neck a beautiful appearance.

How to overcome freckles and enlarged pores.

How to overcome rough hands and keep them white and soft even while doing housework.

How to round out the cheeks.

Hints to wives in regard to husbands.

How to dress charmingly and attractively.

How to acquire a charming personality.

I will tell you the real secrets which I employed on myself and which were undoubtedly of great assistance to me in winning my two international prizes.

You need send no money, not even a postage stamp. You are entitled to read

Mlle. Mareix
Famous Paris Beauty and Winner of Two International Beauty Prizes.

my three Courses of Instruction and try the beauty secrets therein for three days. And if at the end of that time you feel that you can afford to be without them, send them back and you will owe me nothing. If, on the other hand you are confident they will assist you in becoming more beautiful, fascinating and attractive, then send me $1.10. But send no money in advance. Read my free offer of a 50 cent box of face powder below.

The Secret of Many Beautiful Complexions

Very often a complexion is put at a disadvantage through the wrong kind of powder. A slick "made up" appearance is the result. I will send you free six packets containing six different colors of two kinds of the finest face powders including lavender, the marvelous new shade for evening use. These six packets of powder are all creations of Virgil of Paris whose name is famous throughout France for his creations for preserving beauty.

They are free to you to keep and use no matter whether you take my Courses or not. But should you decide to accept the Courses let me know and I will also send you a regular 50 cent box of any selection to use with my Courses of Instruction.

Which of these 50c
boxes of powder
shall I send you free?

Do not decide as to whether you want my Courses or not from this short description. But send for them and look them over at my expense—then decide. The information you will obtain from reading them and the free six packets of powder which I send with the Courses will certainly far more than compensate you for your trouble in writing.

"Onyx" Hosiery Silk

You know this trade-mark through National Periodical Advertising

WHAT is a "trade-mark"? Some of them, which you see every day in Vogue, and in the other magazines of national circulation, are as familiar to you as your own name. Do you fully realize how they protect you?

Many trade-marks are of considerable antiquity. But, before they came into general use, no one could be sure of the brand of merchandise she was buying. Taking advantage of this, unscrupulous manufacturers were able to cheapen quality and raise their prices, as much as they saw fit. Competition was throttled. The purchaser was at the mercy of the dealer.

Now, however, the trade-mark enables you to identify positively the goods you buy. You may depend upon it that when a manufacturer brands his goods, thereby identifying them, and then advertises their identity, he is going to put merit into them. Otherwise he has no chance of keeping your patronage.

The trade-mark makes it as easy to avoid the unsatisfactory as to purchase the satisfactory. Therefore, the presumption of excellence is in favor always of the trade-marked, nationally advertised goods as against the unbranded article of uncertain origin.

Trade-mark and national advertising are two of the greatest public servants in business today. Their tendency is to raise and standardize qualities, at the same time keeping prices on a fair level. Look first for the trade-mark on every article you buy! Only thus are you sure of getting what is popularly and properly known as "your money's worth."

THE COMSTOCK SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

is one of the oldest, best-known New York finishing schools. 54th year opens October 1st, 1915. One block from Central Park—a location which gives opportunity for outdoor sports, tennis, skating and horseback riding.

The building is large, well ventilated, and will open in the Autumn with electric elevator and all modern equipment.

THIS is a school in which each student may elect her special course of study—in Music, Art, Languages, History of Art, English and Classical Dancing.

Girls may enter at any point in their course of study without being called upon to repeat the work that has been thoroughly mastered in other schools.

After the completion of the elected course, a student is entitled to the diploma of the school.

Terms for boarding pupils, $1,100—no extras—including any of the elected courses, with two private lessons a week from

MR. CHARLES LEE TRACY
Head of the Music Department

who has been teaching in New York for the last twenty years as the successful certificated Leschetizky exponent.

"Ich bestätige hiermit, dass ich Herrn Charles Tracy aus Amerika, welcher während zwei Saisons bei mir mit gutem Erfolg seine Studien im Clavierspiel gemacht hat, für vollkommen geeignet halte, als Lehrer in bester und gediegener Weise wirken zu können."

A NEW SCHOOL NEXT YEAR?

YOUR son or daughter is preparing now for the last fraction of the school year. Commencement is only a question of a few days. In the rush and hurry of closing school, preparing for the summer, and attending to all the thousand and one necessary things that turn up at this time of the year, have you stopped to consider how satisfactory the school year has been?

Now is the time for a retrospect. Look back over the past eight months and see if you have been entirely satisfied with the school your daughter has been attending. It is of paramount importance that her surroundings were congenial for otherwise she will have been out of sympathy with the school, and her time and your money will have been wasted.

The school might have been ideal of its kind, yet not the kind of school for your child. If you feel even vaguely dissatisfied do not wait until the summer is over. Investigate the cause now, so that if you decide on a new school you will have time to give it proper consideration.

If, after looking through these pages, you do not find a school that exactly fills your needs, Vogue will help you find one. Tell us fully and frankly what previous education your boy or girl has had, what sort of school you have in mind, where you wish it to be located, the approximate tuition you care to pay, and any other details you think helpful.

Maryland

Maryland College for Women

After Graduation— What?

To the young girl, who is just graduating from high school, and who wishes, in some advanced institution, to complete her education, there are two courses open—the "finishing school" and the college.

The "finishing school" has its supporters, and it fills very well indeed the needs of these supporters, but we believe, for the great majority of girls, the college has more to offer. We also know that, to a selected proportion of this great majority, the Maryland College for Women is the ideal college.

This distinctive institution, chartered in 1853 by the Legislature of Maryland, is situated at Lutherville, Md., a beautiful suburb of Baltimore. Modern fire-proof buildings, recitation halls, dormitories, gymnasium and Music Hall occupy its well kept campus of twelve acres. Tennis courts, golf links, basket ball courts and athletic field are also on the campus.

Courses of Study

The courses of study lead to the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Literature, Oratory and Music. Then, too, there is a splendid School of Art and a School of Domestic Arts and Science (new building), and a School of Expression. The School of Music offers courses by eminent teachers in Piano-forte, Violin, Voice and the Pipe Organ. A new pipe organ and twenty pianos are provided for practice.

Special students are received at the discretion of the faculty. A preparatory course is also offered for those students whose work has at least carried them into the first year of High School.

One hundred and twenty-five to fifty pupils, from nearly every state in the Union, form a student body large enough to provide ample opportunities for social life and athletics, and yet small enough that each girl can be taught and cared for individually.

It is hard, with cold type alone, to give, in toto, the many extraordinary points of this unusual school, but, that you may better appreciate them, we have prepared a book of views and a comprehensive catalogue, which we will be very glad to forward on request.

The Control of Births

BIRTH control is one of a number of subjects which are discussed in Europe from the scientific point of view, but which are treated in this country as if mere mention were a crime. Recently "The Call" and "The New Republic" and perhaps other publications have touched upon the subject. We think they have done wisely. Whatever the arguments on both sides, it is only fair that they should be put before the people. HARPER'S WEEKLY does not at present express an opinion. The subject is complicated and profound. We have for our purpose the presentation of the facts and of opposing arguments. We start with the premise that eugenic subjects in general should be discussed rationally, not emotionally. This particular topic touches the family and the nation. Many distinguished personages are heartily in favor of birth control, for its influence on the standard of living. On the other hand, many observers, Colonel Roosevelt for instance, believe that any interference whatever with the size of families is not only wicked, in a sort of abstract way, but definitely harmful to the community and to the family.

The person whom we selected to open the discussion in HARPER'S WEEKLY with a series of articles is Mary Alden Hopkins, whose solid and scholarly work is known. She has worked as an employee in commercial laundries, hotels, white goods and other factories, and in mercantile establishments. She has done field work for the Consumers' League, the National Child Labor Committee, the Massachusetts Minimum Wage Commission, and other organizations. Her special interest has been in the poorer classes of women and children. The writings she has already done for HARPER'S WEEKLY are sufficient evidence that her presentation of this case will show grasp of the facts and an impartial, scientific spirit.

This series began in the April 10th issue of HARPER'S WEEKLY. It will continue for several months. On receipt of $2.00, covering a six months' trial subscription, beginning with the first week of June, we will send the back copies containing all articles already published in the series.

"QUITE THE NICEST THING ON EARTH"

How Vogue Has Helped a Woman Who Makes Complete Outfits for Babies

"I have never had time to become interested in antiques or relics. New things, and new social movements, have always been of prime importance to me. The movement for 'Better Babies' has especially interested me; in fact, babies have always seemed to me quite the nicest thing on earth, and also the most important. Therefore when choosing a business of my own, the desire to make something for babies was foremost. Then came the desire to make something also for the mother-to-be. So I began my business of making infants' complete outfits, and maternity gowns."

Mrs. Elizabeth C. Leay of Rockford, Illinois, who wrote Vogue this letter, has now been before you for a year in the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide. Seven years ago, she married a well-known restaurateur, whose business at the time was not flourishing. Mrs. Leay threw herself into the work, learned to cook, and to keep accounts, and finally helped to place the restaurant on a profitable footing. Then, "being most heartily tired of cooking," she looked around for a business of her own. How she found it is described in the foregoing paragraph. May we quote another sentence or two from her latest letter to Vogue?

"The question of advertising could be settled in only one way—trying and sifting. I knew little about advertising, and advertising methods, but fortunately I acted on the advice of some friends and tried the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide. Since then I have sent orders to Vogue readers in all parts of the United States, and have had inquiries from Mexico, Alaska, Canada, Hawaii, and Hong Kong."

Mrs. Leay assures us, furthermore, that she has greatly enjoyed corresponding with Vogue's readers. No doubt the pleasure has been mutual. Look through these pages and find the announcements of other women whose acquaintance may prove as interesting as Mrs. Leay's.

*"Curlylocks, Curlylocks, wilt thou be mine?
Thou shalt eat cherry pudding, and drink of red wine,
Sit on a cushion and sew a fine seam—"*

IN this charming forecast of married life, the swain has carefully avoided any mention of the more prosaic preliminaries; he has not referred to the long search for the trousseau, the new luggage, the furniture and decorations of the new home.

This is not, we think, because he would delude poor Curlylocks, but because he knows that his lady, like all modern brides, can now manage all these preparations without great trouble.

Brides of this month may lean very heavily on the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide; nowhere else will they find so many good shops in such convenient compass. Look through these pages now, and see in how many different ways they can help you in all the preliminaries of being married.

"AND DO YOU READ VOGUE?"

A Vogue reader was walking, not long ago, on one of the cross-streets just off Fifth Avenue. She saw a page of Vogue in the window of the Russian Antique Shop, and went in. Here is her own account of an interesting little adventure:

"Hindoo gods, Japanese vases, Roman lamps, grotesque brass figures, all danced queerly in the shop. A little man popped up from an unseen corner. I told him that I had seen a page from Vogue in his window, and that I had come in to look at some door-knockers. The word 'Vogue' caught his ear. 'Ah, and do you read Vogue?' he said. 'A Vogue editor has been here. We showed her our goods. We have had many orders from Vogue readers, and we are always glad to give them our best service.'"

Although the writer of this letter found this Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide establishment in a roundabout way, any other reader can find this little shop—and hundreds of others not less interesting—by simply sitting down and glancing through these pages.

The Name GORHAM Establishes the Character of Your Gift

The greatest attribute of a gift is the sentiment which inspires it — after that the gift itself may be expected to invite the recipient's curiosity.

It is erroneous to assume that people are less interested in the character and quality of a gift, than in what they pay for themselves.

Diamonds are preferable to rhinestones, platinum is more valuable than gold, and silverware is better for the Gorham trade mark — gift or no gift.

This inscription on a piece of silverware establishes the discrimination of the giver and unquestionably increases the recipient's respect for both giver and gift, for the name of Gorham possesses a significance in silverware such as no other name in the world affords.

For sale by leading jewelers everywhere.

A Great Need and an Urgent Appeal

THE SEWING GIRLS OF PARIS

How Vogue Readers May Repay an Obligation

FROM Paris comes a cry of distress that must touch many an American woman more closely than any of the appeals from places actually devastated by the great war. The midinettes of Paris—the little Mimis and Ninettes who have toiled patiently for days that you, perhaps, might shine at the opera in a Paris gown—are now face to face with destitution. Wherever the little seamstress applies for work, she is turned away. Other employment for them there is none; for the slender fingers, so nimble with laces and embroidery, are powerless to undertake the heavy work of the men now at the front.

You can help—and you can help immediately. The publisher of Vogue has become American chairman of The Sewing Girls of Paris Fund. On page 102 of this Vogue you will find a subscription blank. A few dollars may give to some unknown little girl in Paris the sudden relief that will preserve her from the terrors of utter destitution. The need is great. The appeal is directly to you. Can you—and will you—respond?

CABLEGRAM ANSWERS IN NEXT VOGUE

Avalanches of cablegrams, from everywhere; not only from American cities, but from Hawaii, France, Britain—even from Alaska! Out of the avalanche Vogue's editors are selecting the winners. From the uniformly high standard reached by the answers, it has been plain that much deliberation is required. Our readers have been very clever, very circumspect, very original—and the winning answer will show all three qualities.

There is a deal of difficulty in choosing between the crisp short cable that pointedly sums up Vogue, and the detailed one describing features and advantages a foreign friend could not take for granted. Fifty words, as so many wrote us, is a scant allowance in which to describe Vogue, yet many readers employed a large portion of it to "set the scene" for the cable—to describe events supposed to lead up to it. That some of our readers waited till the last minute is evident. We received cables without signatures, some without addresses, while one good lady enclosed a stamped envelope for a reply, and no cablegram at all.

By the time the next Vogue goes to press we shall have selected the winners. The cablegrams awarded prizes will be published in the next Vogue.

A HELEN DRYDEN POSTER

How do you like the cover of this Vogue? That Vogue is enthusiastic about it needs no evidence other than our selection of it for the Summer Fashions Number. Extra proofs, on heavy paper, are now available. Those admirers of Miss Dryden's highly decorative art, who would like to frame this particularly striking example of it, may have these prints for 10 cents each, postpaid. Address Art Department, Vogue, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

AS the title suggests, the next Vogue will be entirely devoted to country interests. It will discuss everything from house boats to formal gardens, and from sports clothes to the interior decorations of country houses. Look for this cover:

Here is a miniature copy of Rita Senger's cover for next (June 15th) Vogue

Although this Vogue which you are now reading is emphatically a fashion number, and contains all the things that are most fashionable for midsummer wear, the next Vogue will have a great many supplementary designs. Among them will be new things for wear in the garden, for all outdoor sports, and for the very least formal of all informal summer occasions.

There will be snap-shots of summer sports events, photographs of Newport gardens, and of Mr. Seymour Hicks's country house in England; and some new examples of interior decoration by Groult of Paris.

FOR YOUR ADVANTAGE

May we harp once more upon the necessity of making sure of your Vogue in advance? That this is a necessity, we know, not merely from letters received from Vogue readers who have found their copies hard to secure, but from our own experiences when one of our staff finds herself away from the city in June and July. If you depend upon a newsdealer for your Vogue, he should be notified that you will want the next Vogue, and the numbers that will follow; in this way only will he be quite sure to secure your copies and to preserve them until you come for them. If, however, you are a subscriber, remember that the post office will not forward magazines as it does letters—therefore give Vogue at least three weeks' notice of any change in your address.

VOGUE is published on the first and fifteenth of every month, by The Vogue Company, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York; Condé Nast, President; Barrett Andrews, Vice President; George von Utassy, Treasurer; Edna Woolman Chase, Editor.

Manuscripts must be accompanied by postage for their return if unavailable. Vogue assumes no responsibility for unsolicited manuscripts except to accord them courteous attention and ordinary care.

Subscriptions for the United States, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, $4 a year in advance. For Canadian delivery, postage must be added at the rate of $1.25 per year. For all other countries, postage $2 a year extra. Remit by check, draft, or postal or express money order. Other remittances at sender's risk. Single copies, 25 cents.

Change of Address.—The address of subscribers can be changed as often as desired. In ordering a change please give both the new address, and the name and address exactly as it appeared on the wrapper of the last copy received. Three weeks' notice required, either for changing an address or for starting a new subscription.

Entered as second-class matter February 16, 1910, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879. Cable Address: Vonork.

MRS. CHARLES B. ALEXANDER

‘ ‘ C ’ E S T L A G U E R R E ’ ’

DURING the entr'acte they snatched a few moments from their talk of blood and bandages to speak of clothes. Their young soldier escort (one to two is a prideful proportion these days) fidgeted in his chair. Finally one of the women sighed, "If I only knew what they are going to wear this summer!" The soldier shifted his crutches and bent toward them. "Le deuil, madame," he said.

And, unhappily, he is right. Nearly every woman who mounted the steps of the Madeleine on Easter Sunday was dressed in deep black. Some of the long veils were worn coquettishly—thrown back picturesquely from a small calotte—while others fell over faces scarred, as it were, by the great tragedy. Every one went to church on Easter Sunday, but a cold drizzling rain put an end to any further celebration. There was no display of flowers. The barrows in the streets were heaped high with purple and white violets and sheaves of yellow jonquils, but instead of buying flowers the passers-by dropped the money into the Red Cross boxes, which are everywhere.

THE FLYING WATCHMEN OF PARIS

In the intensified darkness which now descends upon Paris at nightfall, people seldom venture out. The streets are too gloomy. Each night the Zeppelins are expected, and there is much speculation as to what new form of destruction will fall upon Paris when they come.

Are Frocks Somber? "C'est la Guerre"—Are Frocks Brave with Military Color? "C'est la Guerre"—Are the Theatres Open or Closed, Is There a Wedding, a Funeral, Is It Dull, or Is It Gay? "C'est la Guerre"

However, one grows accustomed even to the thought of bombs and fear passes,—"c'est la guerre."

It is, however, still rather astonishing at night to see a bright, fixed star suddenly swoop and dart in another direction, and to realize that it is an aeroplane—one of the "flying squadron" on guard over Paris.

"The situation at the front remains unchanged"—this is the favorite and enlightening form of the official communiqués. But the wounded soldiers still pour into Paris. The gray ambulances leave their bandaged burdens almost daily at the rue Cambon entrance to the Hôtel Ritz.

Great gray motor-cars with tops like "prairie schooners" pass through the streets, laden with supplies. Occasionally one sees an armored car, its grayness further grayed with dust, shooting along the boulevards; or a motorcyclist, dyed, as it were, in the gray dust of the roads, racing like a demon through the streets.

THE BUSINESS OF WAR

Detachments of soldiers on their way to railway station or caserne, march in silence. One seldom hears the "Marseillaise" now; but two nights ago a voice from the street below my window suddenly lifted itself in the marvelous "Chant du Départ," that most tragically beautiful of all war songs.

A pack of "war" playing cards, actually designed in the trenches by a former student at the Beaux-Arts, was brought back to Paris recently by a soldier returning from the front. They were very cleverly designed. The four kings are the four generals, Joffre, Maunoury, de Castelnau, and Foch; the four queens, Mlle. Bartet, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, Mme. Yvette Guilbert, and Mlle. Regina Badet, while the knaves are Mounet-Sully, Polin, Dranem, and Noté.

It would take more than a war to wrest from midsummer its wide-brimmed hat, and one is presented by Renée in blue tulle and straw, with trimming of light and dark blue roses

The fur boa, introduced by Mlle. Forzane, is widely adopted and has become part of the accepted Bois costume, which is headed by a close turban and toed by extremely high boots of leather

Ribbon is increasingly favored in the trimming of hats, and many hats are made entirely of ribbon, as is this white grosgrain turban with wing-like bows which is a creation of Renée

The new "Bottin" which has just been issued, while very much like those of preceding years as regards the exterior, differs astonishingly inside, for it contains the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine! And I hear that we are no longer to have an "Almanach de Gotha." At least, Germany is not to be included in the new "Almanach," which is to be called in future the "Almanach de Bruxelles."

"LA JALOUSIE" AND GENUINE AMUSEMENT

Audiences in the Paris theatres this winter have been interested, thrilled, and moved to tears, but it was not until a short time ago, at the Bouffes-Parisiens, that I saw an audience genuinely amused. The occasion was the first performance of Sacha Guitry's little three-act comedy, "La Jalousie," with the author in the rôle of the too-jealous husband, and Charlotte Lysès as the long-suffering Marthe. In the first act she wore the Paquin frock sketched at the lower right on this page. The skirt was of black taffeta edged at the bottom with black beads and fell from a pointed yoke of black lace. The draped girdle was of taffeta with a cluster of vivid flowers at the front, and the brief bodice of black lace was laid over white silk. In the second act Mme. Lysès wore a simple frock of beige cloth with a deep collar of black velvet,

At the Bouffes-Parisiens, which has recently succeeded in genuinely amusing its audiences despite the war, pretty Jeanne Gaillardin wore this costume of beige cloth with a dapper cravat of Scotch plaid. The black hat has a white wing

Though the Parisienne may not follow her soldiers to the war, she at least may don a uniform for her walk in the Bois, and tailored suits like this, with belted flaring coat and short flaring skirt, are almost universally adopted and a sash of gold tissue falling from underneath a cloth belt.

"La Jalousie" was preceded by "Le Bouquet," a one-act play in which pretty Jeanne Gaillardin wore two charming frocks,—one the beige costume, with its smart Scotch plaid cravat, sketched at the lower left on this page; the other the pretty boudoir gown sketched at the lower left on page 25. In this the straight plaited robe of gold and white brocaded chiffon is partially concealed by a loose coat of transparent black and gold brocade. A rope of green beads girdles this simple gown and green beads and tassels decorate the tops of the short white tulle sleeves. A band of gold embroidery forms the narrow yoke, and the white satin shoes are laced with white ribbons.

Marthe Chenal, in "Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame," is appearing at the Opéra-Comique; but one can not think now of Chenal as singing anything but the "Marseillaise." Dufranne, as the monk Boniface, sang so well the famous

*"Fleurissait une sauge
"Au bord du chemin—"*

that he was encored again and again.

THE MODE?—"C'EST LA GUERRE"

As to clothes,—again, c'est la guerre. And besides the weather has been cold in Paris, so that warm-weather frocks have not yet made their appearance. People dress very soberly at the theatres, and in the Bois the tailored suits are almost of uniform pattern—flaring jackets, belted, and short flaring skirts. Small smart turbans often with a very flat trimming of flowers, and high leather boots complete the costume. These high boots, by the way, which were so perfectly fitting and so attractive in the salons in February, are very apt to slide down and wrinkle in rather an ugly fashion at the ankle when worn regularly on the street. Jenny's manteaus "Généralissime" and "Cosaque" have appeared again and again in all fabrics. Mme. Jenny apparently struck the right chord for the season in these smart models.

Armenonville is again open and now that Les Ambassadeurs is so crowded people are going to Armenonville for tea. Some days ago I saw there the pretty frock of black taffeta sketched at the upper right on page 25. The very narrow yoke of the corsage tied in front in a smart bow, forming a cravat above a blouse front of white satin buttoned down the middle front. The girdle was of black varnished leather and the wide skirt was very short. A small turban with a towering quill was worn with it.

Hats are more and more frequently trimmed with ribbon. One of the newest turbans, which is shown at the lower right on page 23, is made entirely of white grosgrain ribbon, and has a bird-like bow perched on each side. Another that is of beige grosgrain, and is trimmed with small twisted knots of ribbon, while a beige quill soars aloft at the left side in the back. A close turban of brown glazed straw is trimmed with flat beige dahlias.

CHARITY IN CAKES AND CHAMPAGNE

In the cause of charity and to cheer Paris, Mlle. Cécile Sorel, Mlle. Jane Faber of the

At the première of Sacha Guitry's delightful comedy, "La Jalousie," at the Bouffes-Parisiens, Charlotte Lysès, as the long-suffering Marthe, wore a Paquin costume of black taffeta and lace, with jet-edged hem and vivid roses

Comédie Française, and Mlle. Marcelle Lender of the Variétés all took an active part in a recent charity bazaar at the Hôtel Meurice and sold cakes and champagne with great success. A "Jeu de massacre," in charge of Mme. Blanche Dufrène of the Théâtre Sarah Bernhardt proved a great attraction, and Mlle. Greuze—also of the Théâtre Sarah Bernhardt—collected the money for tea. In the crowd I saw a pretty young girl wearing an ample, all-concealing cloak of black taffeta with a huge square collar and enormous cuffs of taffeta embroidered with small bright flowers.

The long manteau was perhaps the most unique garment evolved last season and the one destined to have the greatest influence on the summer's modes. This easily fitting and all-enveloping manteau of silk, brocade, or gabardine—practical and pretty—is worn by every one.

The Parisienne does not wear the flowing veil, which has received a certain amount of favor in other places. Over her small turban a lace veil is sometimes very closely drawn, with not so much as a thread floating in the breeze. At Les Ambassadeurs, not long ago, I saw a small and charming person wearing on her head a white lace veil arranged as it would have been over a close turban, but with no hat underneath. A veil is never worn with a large hat, and recently, the veil, denied to the large hat, has attached itself at times to the parasol, so as to veil the face and shoulders. Extremely effective and picturesque when posed at a certain angle is a parasol such as this, and it might at times be a most inconvenient article to carry.

One or two cape coats have appeared, doubtless inspired by the cavalry coat, which is now so much in evidence. The cape, circular in shape and not too ample, falls to the hips, while the coat itself extends almost to the bottom of the skirt.

Many plaited skirts were shown at the February openings but the plaited skirt is not a favorite in Paris. As to the high ruff or collar of organdy the Parisienne can not quite make up her mind—now she wears it and now she does not; but the belted coat is an unquestioned favorite with every one.

PARIS HOLDS A "RAG FAIR"

Any one familiar with the joys of searching the rubbish heaps at the Caledonian market in London would have found the place de la Nation, during Holy Week, a happy hunting-ground. The Foire à la Feraille is a Caledonian market, a Temple fair, and a rummage sale rolled into one, and is calculated to prove the ruin of the unwary. This year, however, although the crowd was very great, the buyers were few—c'est la guerre. At this fair one may buy not only old iron but old furniture, old china, old glass, and miniatures of by-gone beauties in quaint old frames. There were boxes of porcelain and bronze, soiled and tarnished, fans beau-

Short as a street costume was the dainty boudoir gown worn by Jeanne Gaillardin in "Le Bouquet." The plaited robe is of white and gold, and the coat of gold brocaded black chiffon. Tassels and girdle are of green beads.

Though many wide hats are conceded to mid-summer, the general tendency is to close turbans with flat trimming or the aspiring feathers which Alphonsine has used in white to trim this white straw turban.

Straight upright like a drum-major's brush is the gray quill on this trim white satin hat, and the fluted collar seconds it, while the skirt plays a variation on this theme of crispness in its wide spreading black taffeta folds.

tifully painted but broken more or less, jewelry of old-time pattern, silverware almost hopelessly blackened, old pewter jugs, and fine glass.

THE COLLECTOR'S DAY

Heaps of old prints, books, and paintings were draped with fragments of old brocade and lace. In one booth I saw an old, old coffret of hand-wrought iron, twelve inches long by five inches wide, with a key which, from its size, might have been the key to a city gate. Inside was a lining of old brocade, worn threadbare, and the outside of the coffret was painted a bit clumsily with figures of men and women in period dress. Fifty francs was asked of an American for this bit, while to an Englishwoman the price was forty francs. How much might have been asked of a native buyer I do not know; but when I went back a little later, prepared to part with fifty francs, the coffret was gone.

A tea-tray of black lacquer, painted and inlaid with mother-of-pearl, was another alluring bit. The price was ten francs and the purchaser was an Englishwoman who has one of the most interesting studios in Paris. Candlesticks of silver, bronze, and porcelain gleamed from booths and tottered on the uneven pavement, where some of the smaller vendors had spread their wares. A search of large dusty boxes of old broken trinkets revealed several lovely bits of old mosaic and a queer ball and tassel of ivory. An old black bowl set with colored stones proved, on being polished, to be made of silver and to be of Moorish workmanship. Not a stone was missing from the pattern and the price was ten francs.

A liqueur chest of ebony inlaid with brass and tortoise-shell, containing sixteen liqueur glasses and two carafes—two were missing—was twelve francs. The buyer of this chest was confronted five minutes later with another chest of rosewood inlaid with ebony, for which was asked the astounding price of four francs. This was irresistible, and with a liqueur chest under each arm, a bowl in one pocket, a jug in another, and decorated like a Christmas tree with objects of bronze and porcelain, the purchaser disappeared in the direction of the tramway.

FUNERAL OF THE DUKE DE MONTMORENCY

At St. Philippe du Roule about the middle of last month, impressive funeral services were held for Count Adalbert de Talleyrand-Périgord, Duke de Montmorency. Contrary to the usual custom, no flowers were used in the church, but the family arms blazed from every sable hanging and from the four sides of the massive catafalque. Many residents of the Faubourg St. Germain who have been wintering in the south or on their country estates, came up to Paris for this service, and Paris had a fleeting glimpse of some of her charming mondaines. The Duchess de Rohan-Chabot, accompanied by her daughter, Princess Lucien Murat, sat near the Duchess d'Albufera and the Countess de Béarn. Madame Marghiloman, Madame Vesnitch, and Madame Tittoni were glimpsed in the closely filled church, and Countess Jean de Castellane sat near the front with the Talleyrand-Périgord family.

AMERICANS IN PARIS

The family of the American Ambassador, Mr. William G. Sharpe has taken the Bartholoni residence in l'avenue d'Eylau. This is a four-story stone house set within a fine garden and furnished with admirable collections of art objects, old furniture, and silver. Dwellings suitable for an embassy are usually hard to get, but this year many are available. C'est la guerre.

Mrs. Clarence Postley, so long a well-known hostess in Franco-American society, has decided to forsake Paris for her native land, and the contents of her apartment in the rue de Bassano have been shipped to America. Mrs. Postley will make her home at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in New York. Commander and Mrs. Sayles—the new naval attaché of the American embassy and his wife—have taken an apartment formerly occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Green in l'avenue Henri Martin, and are already great favorites in the remnant of the American colony now left in Paris.

Countess de la Chesnaye, who was the beautiful Miss Daisy Kirk, is living very quietly in Switzerland, where she awaits the end of hostilities before entering her new home in the Quartier Monceau.

It is still dull in Paris, although, one by one, people are coming back. The Baroness Maurice de Rothschild is one of the latest arrivals and may be seen any fine morning in the Bois. Always simply dressed, she walks with an easy swinging English stride which could have been acquired, it seems, nowhere save in English lanes. A. S.

VOGUE POINTS

IT is long since stripes have so dominated a season. Striped materials are used for afternoon frocks of silk; for fluffy evening dresses (though here they may be veiled with tulle); for parasols, for blouses, for sweaters, and even for hats. Narrow stripes and broad stripes play almost equal part, though at present the tendency seems toward the broader ones. For summer wear, stripes are cool in appearance and this season they will be very smart. Afternoon dresses are particularly attractive in striped batiste, and the new sweaters in broad striped satin and silk jersey suggest the old-fashioned blazer, but are more attractive, as the stripes are usually in a solid color alternating with white.

The neck-line, always far from a stationary thing, has now become altogether optional. The collar may rise, so to speak, to the ears, or it may turn back and show a round or a V neck. But smarter than either, though more trying to wear, is the collar which fastens at the base of the throat, revealing the neck at the front and concealing it at the back. Women have tired of the low collars, yet refuse the high ones, and this compromise is very smart, though it is unquestionably trying.

This season, as last, color in suits tends to the darker tones, and dark blues and blacks are far in the lead. Beige is also used, and an occasional brown, soldier blue, or oxford gray. For trimming on tailored suits, plain silk braid and bone buttons are all that are permissible, unless it be a collar of white faille.

In the summer frocks of sheer materials; beaded ruffles and tucks of various widths are two points not to be overlooked. The ruffles we have had before, and tucks, wide and narrow, are a revival which is especially attractive in the transparent materials over a solid colored foundation, as it gives a line which is apparent and decorative without being harsh.

A familiar figure in the Bois is the finely mounted Countess de Saint-Léon, who is the daughter of the Duke d'Albufera, maréchal de France under Napoleon III

At smart weddings the number of taffeta dresses worn is noticeable. Here the full skirt finds its chance, and ripples out sometimes in a single skirt, sometimes in a double or even a triple skirt. One very smart Pre-met model of crisp black taffeta has a double skirt, with the edges trimmed with deep bands of fine tucks. This tucked band holds the double skirt out in a most bouffant manner, and may or may not be edged with a tiny knife plaiting of taffeta. This skirt has been worn most attractively with a bodice which, though more fitted than those of other seasons, follows the natural line of the figure rather than the pinched-in waist. It drops a bit below the waist in front, and in the back has an even more semi-fitted line, laced with strings of taffeta. There is one lovely many-ruffled model which billows out in six or eight graduated flounces from the tight fitting bodice to a very wide hem. To accentuate the width of the hem on a black taffeta frock Martial et Armand used black braid. Though many of the smartest frocks have little or no trimming, as in the cases just mentioned, there are others with fine silver or gold tracery used in a conservative fashion; that is, the tracery occurs at the belt-line, at the end of a sash, or on the collar, leaving the rest of the dress plain. Beads are used in the same manner and may be most charming. As a rule, however, some pretty collar arrangement of white or beige is the chief contrast with taffeta frocks. Though dark colored nets are used in the waists, they do not play so large a part as in the frocks of last season.

Extreme height of collar and length of coat mark one of the favored frocks in monotone, which was created by Martial et Armand from beige etamine, beige faille, and embroidery in beige

THE MIDINETTE WITH EMPTY HANDS

Editor's Note:—Among those who cry to us for help from war ravaged Europe, there is no class whose plight seems so peculiarly to appeal to women as that of the sewing girls of Paris. For these brave little women whom war has robbed of work and who are now face to face with starvation, Vogue has accepted the direction of the American branch of an organization that has been formed to befriend them, and has started its fund with a donation of $5000. Every American woman who knows the steadfast character and industry of these little working women of Paris will want to give her share toward their relief. A subscription blank is printed on page 102

MUCH has been written about the midinette, but few people know her. Visitors to Paris remember the swarm of girls released from work at the lunch hour—midi, hence the name, midinettes; they remember that the girls scattered to the Tuileries to munch a roll, with a piece of chocolate or a penny's worth of fruit as dessert, and some patrons of the large dressmaking establishments remember that now and then, as a door has been left open, they have caught the sound of buzzing voices in the atelier where the midinettes were at work. However, this is little to know of a life at once picturesque and industrious.

To begin at the beginning: at the age of thirteen or fourteen the midinette enters a dressmaking establishment as apprentice, and she usually remains in the dressmaking business for the rest of her life. She receives no pay as apprentice, except in a very few establishments, where she may be rewarded with the munificent sum of thirty-five or fifty cents a week. After two years apprenticeship, the apprentice graduates into the ranks of the seamstresses, becomes a real midinette, and makes, perhaps, ten dollars a month, to begin with. After several years' experience, she may receive twenty or twenty-five dollars a month. Thirty dollars a month is considered to be a large salary.

Most of the midinettes live in the suburbs of Paris and, as is usually the case in any corner of the world where women work, they have not only themselves to support, but must eke out the family income with a part of their salaries. Besides their work in the ateliers, many of the midinettes must help with the housework in their homes.

As to amusements, the midinette has few. Nowhere in the world does a respectable girl have as dull a time as in France; and the midinette is respectable, intensely so, contrary to the opinion sometimes expressed in America. As for her pleasures, according to the good old French traditions and conventions, the midinette must take them en bloc with her family, or do without them.

The midinette, who, in the rush season, may have to go home alone from her work at eleven or twelve o'clock in the evening, will not, on a holiday, go to a matinee alone with a friend, nor is she apt even to take a walk with him, unless there are older people along. So, as the older people can not always be depended upon, the only permanent diversion becomes the public library, from which books are borrowed and are devoured in the evenings. The museums, which the midinette frequents on Sundays, are one of her chiefest joys.

While the midinette has long hours—the ten-hour day is enforced in France, as a rule, but in the rush season the girls sometimes work longer—and while she works under great pressure, her labor is not mechanical. Her brain is always active, and her good taste and judgment and imagination are perpetually being called upon. This develops in her the creative faculty of the artist, and accounts for the refinement of her personality and mentality.

The artist, even of low birth, will, as he develops, differ from the other members of his family. In a lesser degree, the midinette, too, is apt to be mentally above her surroundings, even though she may not be herself aware of any breach. She is interested in books, for instance, which one would perhaps, upon first thought, consider beyond her horizon. One is surprised to hear her discuss Anatole France or the philosophical works of Bourget with judgment as well as charm, and to find that in music she is able to appreciate Debussy, Bach, and Massenet. On art, too, she has her own opinions, gathered from her frequent excursions to the Louvre and the Luxembourg, and her visits to the spring and autumn salons.

In Paris, a gown is never completely designed by one person. The idea comes from the designer, but often the distinctive draping or the arrangement of trimming is the inspiration of some little worker. A celebrated couturier, who recently visited America, said that French

VOGUE PLAYS A NEW RÔLE

Fashion, Becoming Stagestruck, Dramatizes Vogue
Fashions, Cover and All,
for an Extended Road Tour

AMONG the bevy of fashion fêtes that followed in the wake of the initial one held under the auspices of Vogue Magazine at the New York Ritz-Carlton Hotel early last winter, was a fashion fête staged on a real stage. During the week of April 12, a theatrical manager staged Vogue magazine, cover design, fashions, and all, at the New York Palace Theatre. Every time the cover shown in the photograph below was flipped back, a chic model walked right out of a page of the magazine. The gowns displayed were, beginning at the upper left, a Lanvin model from Bonwit Teller & Co.; at upper right, Jean model; on opposite page, upper right, Hickson model; upper left, Joseph model; lower left, George Bernard model; lower right, O'Sullivan model; lower left of group on this page, Maison Bernard model; third from left, Jenny model from Maison Maurice; fourth, Estelle Mershon model; fifth, Bonwit Teller model; sixth, Harry Collins model; seventh, Lucile model; eighth, Lucile model; twelfth, Maison Maurice model. The "Fashion Fête" has now left the Palace Theatre and is on a regular vaudeville circuit, which includes both eastern and western cities.

An all round country companion is the flat floppy hat of white "peanut" straw above; the crown is low and round, and the brim is big and round. There is a facing of green Japanese straw to shade the eyes and there is a band of green grosgrain ribbon

The hat at the left is of bias folds of colored taffeta and a white cockade. It may be packed in a portmanteau and will come out as good as new. Because it comes in the colors so familiar in sweaters, it is a "sweater hat"

Though it may prefer a hat with a more feminine pseudonym in more formal seasons, all the world loves a sailor in the summertime, and the one below of oyster white silk crêpe justifies the favoritism. The band is white kid and the binding is white ribbon

The big green felt sailor above, having first compromised its severity by an oblong brim, added on a band of purple shredded silk without a qualm. This and the model at the lower right are from C. M. Phipps, Inc.; the others are from A. D. Burgess & Co.

Aslant to ward off the sun from no matter what angle it makes its attack, is the wide sailor sketched at the upper left. The top of the crown is of black hemp, the upper brim is of white felt, and the facing is of black hemp

Though it is two-faced, any woman can turn the hat in the middle inside out in no time. It is of soft hemp in different combinations of colors; worn one way it may be white and blue, reversed it may be white and green

"It is not that the mode loves panama less, but that it loves me more," nods the white "peanut" straw of the hat at the right, for "peanut" straw is more substantial than panama, yet as attractive. The underbrim is green Japanese straw and the band is green suede

NO MATTER HOW OFTEN THEY ARE TURNED INSIDE OUT

Against a background of white chiffon silver thread simulates shimmering balloons, and against a silver tissue and gray satin girdle silver balls bob from a white satin bodice, cut like a short-sleeved coatee. A white Georgette crêpe turban grounds sprays of white paradise, and if the garden-party be formal or the mountain air cool, a scarf of tailless ermine is necessary, did the mode itself not already make it essential

Squares of embroidery in white thread and white beads offset the sheerness of very sheer handkerchief linen in the dress at the left. One entire white fox offsets the coolness of such a frock and lends an added grace to the drooping pink crêpe brim of the flower-trimmed milan hat. Furs from H. Jaekel & Sons

The mode flies loyal colors from hat to hem in the costume at the right, for in the hat army red linen trims soldier blue crêpe, and in the dress it trims soldier blue handkerchief linen. Lest the Eton cut of the bodice and the smart pocket-flaps pass unnoted, army red linen pipes them, and binds the buttonholes to make the blue buttons stand out. The rest is organdy, ruffled and tucked. Hats and gowns shown by Miss Carroll

SEEING THROUGH THE MODE OF GOWNS AND

HATS — FURS FOR THE SUMMER SOLSTICE

FROM DŒUILLET, MARTIAL ET ARMAND, AND DOUCET

Nothing, it is generally conceded, is so entirely smart as soldiers in review, and there is about this frock from the newest creations of Martial et Armand, a crisp suggestion of "Files-on-parade," which is ably seconded by the close little hat. The frock is of white cloth, gold-embroidered and trimmed with small white buttons, and the line at the bottom of the skirt is both graceful and unusual (at left)

"All things to all women" is the principle of a Dœuillet gown, which serves conservatism by an underdress of blue taffeta and the mode by wide-flaring flounces of white tulle edged with organdy bands, and which drops from bodice to hips a lace cuirass which may be said either to veil or to emphasize the incurving waist-line of the blue underslip. Plaited tulle with organdy collar and frills forms the bodice, and the small hat is beribboned like the sleeves

After a model from Doucet was sketched a frock for summer's garden-parties. The skirt of dark blue taffeta is shirred on cords to just above the knee, where it flares, as the mode would lead one to expect, in a wide frill, below which are other shirrings and yet another flaring frill. The plaited and frilled blouse is of white muslin and the wide hat, held by a "bride" beneath the chin, is of white organdy drooping beneath heavy roses

COSTUMING THE SPORTSWOMAN, WHETHER SHE

CHOOSE TO WALK, TO RIDE, OR TO MOTOR

Scotch heather cloth in that lovely tannish gold shade which finds its foil in every country scene, fashions this top-coat. The cut is loose and adapts the coat to wear over a suit as well as over a frock, and the collar is adjustable, which marks the wrap a motor and storm coat, while it is also a fair-weather friend

The successful rival of the linen riding-habit is a habit of tropical-weight cloth. Linen does not justify the nicety of tailoring that riding trimness demands. In solid colors, or in black with incisible stripes, the model shown is circumspection itself. The hat is a modified sailor of panama. Models from Hertz

Mannish lines and scrupulous tailoring characterize a smartly dapper country suit of green and white checked Scotch tweed. The coat is made exactly like a man's sports coat, save for side plaits, and the skirt is wide for comfort and short for smartness. The white milan hat is banded with green grosgrain ribbon

AMERICAN ART ADOPTS A PARIS FASHION

IT is true, no doubt, of every new country that its spirit of play awakes slowly, and that even when awakened, it enters but slowly into the field of its art. Of humorists in the field of literature, America can present a creditable array, from "Hosea Bigelow" to Mark Twain, nor are professional makers of humorous sketches and cartoons lacking; yet never until this spring has a group of serious artists given free rein to the spirit of humor and presented to the public the productions of their play time.

In Paris, the Salon des Humoristes has long been an annual spring event, and to it not only the professional caricaturists but serious artists of every line have contributed essentially French, and irresistibly witty examples of the art of "teaching the philosophy of life by means of laughter." This year for the first time, American artists followed the example of their French confrères, and they presented at the Folsom Galleries from April 17 to May 1, the initial exhibition of the American Salon of Humorists.

THE WIT OF DAYS OFF

The group of artists who are represented in this exhibition in no way form a clique, nor do they advance any new or striking technique or put forward any amazing attempt to win publicity. On the contrary, they are twenty-five intelligent and serious artists out on a holiday, looking with the keen eyes of the artist at the follies and fantasies of humanity and ridiculing them, not boisterously or flippantly, but wittily and with ironic mockery.

That in this initial attempt the Paris Salon des Humoristes has been equaled can hardly be claimed even by the most enthusiastic supporters. There was more than one instance to be seen in which the artist missed that indefinable distinction between wit and mere ridicule which is so clear to the Frenchman, and there was more than one drawing which lacked a definitely humorous inspiration. There was, however, more than enough of genuine humor and truly mirthful presentation to carry the undertaking to success and to lead those who viewed the exhibition to hope that the life of the American Salon of Humorists may be long.

Among the well-known artists who contributed to this exhibition were George Bellows, a painter of coast scenes which have sometimes won the honor of comparison with those of Winslow Homer, the foremost American painter of the seacoast; Robert Henri, whose spirited and broadly painted portraits are justly ranked high; George Luks and William Glackens, both artists of recognized merit; and Guy Pène du Bois, whose work, often humorous and sometimes serious, is well-known.

A S S E E N b y H I M

MY gardens are a glow of June roses, but, alas, hardly was I settled in the country when the sea began to call me away, and to-morrow I am off with a party of friends on a yachting cruise. This year restlessness must perforce suggest new places, and there are parties arranged for Alaska and for the north-western territory. However, few of us are strikingly original, and later we will doubtless foregather as usual at Newport, Narragansett, Bar Harbor, the Massachusetts north shore, and Southampton.

At Newport there will be some new faces, and some new hostesses will entertain. I have never regarded Newport otherwise than as a most democratic place, a place where any one who has money, tact, and patience can reach the goal of social aspirations. The more the merrier there. Sometimes the entrée is there made even without money, but such isolated examples by no means set up for Newport the motto that "innocence is as august in rags as in the fleurs-de-lis." On the contrary, Newport is prone to demand either money or the fleurs-de-lis and to discount innocence, and he who would enter there would best make success doubly sure by exhibiting all the money he has along with whatever social graces he can command to make himself a fair outside.

After all, general entertaining at Newport means very little. For a large affair we ask to our houses people who are merely acquaintances, if that. This does not mean that we admit them into our intimate circle, of course. We can likewise accept such hospitalities in the same spirit; it means nothing except to add to the gaiety of a summer.

WE GROW TIRED OF OUR OWN LIONS

There are plenty of places to go to this summer, to be sure, and, as I have just said, plenty of people to go to them, but what we shall do when we get there, is a question. Alas, we have grown tired of our own lions, and long for some of a foreign variety to stroke. A foreign lion is always an excuse to be merry, and I fear that this year boredom will devour us before the rise of the harvest moon.

For all these prognostications of woe, Newport has a promise of a brilliant season. The villas are all taken; there are hostesses, absent for a number of seasons, who will return this season; and, although we shall miss many of our friends who have been thrown into mourning, we will not have many empty chairs at our dinner-parties, or many "singles" on our tennis-courts.

What will be the story of Newport, will also be that of other places. It is not now absolutely obligatory to go to the summer city of Rhode Island in order to round out the season. There is no one leader of society, there is not one set, one court, one circle; we have demonstrated in a way that we are a democracy. Even the climber is fast disappearing; there is nowhere to climb.

As for myself, I think I will abandon the whole petty round, and take to the sea for the most of the summer. I have always believed that yachting is the true sport of a gentleman. One writer on the subject has called it the "supreme luxury," and if he means by this that it is difficult to skimp along with a running cost of not more than twenty thousand dollars a month—and that without much entertaining—he is right. The great difficulty about servants is going to make yachting even more costly this year than ever, and, consequently—to be banal—more "exclusive." The supply of silver-haired butlers is quite plentiful, but tall footmen to match are quite scarce. The crew—officers, engineers, and people of that sort—will not be hard to get, but there is a scarcity of chefs and stewards and men-servants generally. These servants, as well as our lions, we have been in the habit of taking

Plenty of People to Go Places, and Plenty of Places to Go, but—Once We Drew Our Lions and Our Servants from the Alien Classes, and How Can We Be We without Them?

A SEAFARING SUMMER

from the alien class, and now the alien class is at the front!

On board my own yacht I am at home, no matter what tide may rise beneath me. This feeling of possessing my own background has grown to be almost a necessity to me. I am really very sensitive to milieu, and I always have a lurking sympathy for that very rich and fashionable New York matron who had everything in the world she could desire, and who was in a most comfortable state of mind, so long as she had her "setting." It mattered little where she was or where she went, so long as she could be surrounded en route with that to which she was accustomed. She was a widow, she liked to have people around her, and frequently when she went to Europe in her yacht she would ask some less fortunate friend. One year, it was Miss C, a spinster who had never been to Europe.

"Where do you want to go this winter?" asked the rich lady with courtesy. "Make your choice."

"Italy," Miss C. exclaimed, her voice shaking with emotion, "Rome! my dream has been Rome!"

"Well then, Rome," replied the rich woman dryly, "if you want to go there. Very interesting, Rome, but you know, my dear, it is so fearfully out of repair."

I smile at this, but, to a great extent, it is my own point of view these latter days. Also many people sympathize with this point of view who do not entertain it themselves, for all of us want our kingdoms, our familiar surroundings, our necessities,—we want our background to be modernized as we are, to be in repair.

ILLUSTRATORS TO THE FORE

As for other things besides our personal frivolities, this year has sobered our thought of these things, has even crystallized it into resolve in a great many cases. For one thing, we have made a beginning in the matter of cultivating our own literature and art. We are now extending practical patronage to American illustrations and art. For instance, at the Hotel Majestic in New York in one of the entertainment rooms, a frieze has been made of medallions of the covers and designs published by Vogue, and readers of this magazine will recognize every one of them. In this connection, it is interesting to see that the prevailing note in American magazine covers of to-day is the surprise of color. This symbolizes our natural characteristic. A surprise is a pleasure, even though it is a shock. We are not satisfied with the blending of neutral tints, we want something more positive, something to stand for the sunshine, the warmth, the optimism, which is a national trait. This has been caught by our illustrators, and it has been followed by decorators, and even garden enthusiasts, and it has not been neglected by la mode.

As for our new literature, I was requested recently to look over a list of books to assist in selecting literature for the village library, and I found it to be quite a task. There are fashions in literature as in everything else. In the scholarly world, there is but little interest in the native output of the day, but a village library caters to the middle and working classes, and its requirements are different. I went about my duties seriously, but the fiction I looked over seemed to be all alike, and the best sellers had only the advantage of being the most extensively advertised. On the whole, I concluded that our modernists do better as writers of reminiscences, essays, and papers on questions bearing upon government, finance, and religious and philosophical subjects, than they do in writing fiction. Just now all the novels seem to be built upon the foundations of short stories which have appeared in the rainbow-covered magazines. There is a run on the middle west and far west type of story, and romances of moving pictures and the vaudeville stage are omnipresent. The war novels are just appearing on the horizon—and will probably be with us like the poor.

I said something recently about "Fear and Conventionality," by Elsie Clews Parsons. This is, of course, a serious volume, yet a thread of delicate satire runs through it, a gleam of the humor and wit which are the weapons of a clever woman in society. Mrs. Parsons is a young matron in the fashionable New York set, who has achieved the degree of Ph. D. This is her third book, and one remembers the sensation caused by her first somewhat unconventional book, "The Family." Mrs. Parsons is one more to prove that "society," as the newspapers term us, is not made up entirely of butterflies and drones.

SPRINGSONG

*The first spring rain fell down on me to-day,
And as it touched my face, it bathed away
The stain of every past regret;
Its freshness falling on my eyes and hair
Told me there was fulfilment everywhere,
That love could surely not forget.*

*A gust of winter wind blew up to-night,
And as it touched my face, it seemed to blight
The hope the first spring rain begot;
Its harshness falling on my hair and eyes
Told me that wanton springtime whispered lies—
That long ago had love forgot.*

Like her sister, Mrs. Devereux Milburn, Miss Steele is fond of sports, and plays polo very well. Mr. Milburn and Mr. von Stade are considered two of the best riders and polo players in this country. Miss Steele and Mr. von Stade were members of a party, as were also Mr. and Mrs. Milburn, that lately attended the polo tournament at San Francisco.*

FEATHERING THE CAP OF THE CLIMBER

More Convincing of Caste Than Fine Gold, and Far Better

Than a Counterfeit Coat-of-Arms, Is a "Queer Aunt Jane," or a "Downright Uncle Richard"; All the Best Families Have Them

THERE are poor relations, and poor relations, some whom their more fortunate kin regard as a social detriment, others whom they cherish, not only with affection, but with pride. Everybody has them; even kings are not exempt. Henry VIII, through his reckless and uneugenic habit of marrying almost any woman whom he saw, acquired a blacksmith cousin. The possession of poor relations is the final and authentic mark of a family's age and respectability. Only the new rich are ashamed of the old poor. Those who have acquired wealth and social elevation with dizzying suddenness should seek out their neglected poor relations and exhibit them by way of preparation for the pretense of ancient and distinguished lineage. If such a family really has no poor relations, it should invent a few. The thing is easily done; there are millions of poor eager to be adopted, and naught is so convincing of a family's claim to ancient American lineage as a queer Cousin Jane or a downright Uncle Richard.

IGNORANCE as to the value of poor relations has ruined the social career of many an aspiring family. Money will get such a family a house in the right part of town, a shooting-lodge here, a country home there, a pew in a fashionable church, and many other things that further social aspirations, but money will not teach the value of poor relations, or the execrable taste of snubbing them. When Mrs. Oldlands calls upon Mrs. Newrich, and catches her hustling some queer old body out of the drawing-room, the genuine great lady has an accurate measure of her hostess's social horizon. As like as not Mrs. Oldlands has left at home her dear and cherished old Cousin Jane, as queer a body as any one ever called aunt or cousin, and the special and peculiar pride of the Oldlands family. Poor relations are Mrs. Oldlands's specialty; she knows what they stand for in family tradition; she parades them in the presence of her guests, and when they are absent, she tells the most delicious tales of their quaint and picturesque old homes. She likes to have her children visit them, for these poor relations are very treasuries of family tradition. Unharried by social cares and the deceitfulness of riches, these good folk have time for that delightful task, the study of family tradition.

DOWN in Virginia and Maryland, all old families have poor relations. If a family is without them, that family is not early seventeenth century. If a Marylander has no soft-spoken, dingy old ladies—his fourth or fifth cousins—living parsimoniously on the Eastern Shore, or in one of the old Catholic counties of the Western Shore, be sure that his family never intermarried with the Calverts. One finds these old ladies of family piously caring for the communion silver presented by Queen Anne to some quaint and half-ruined old country church with brick walls and a stone floor. With a glass or two of old Madeira, they will presently tell the quaintest family traditions—of this ancestor who came ashore from a wrecked ship on a hencoop, of a Huguenot refugee who spoke naught but French, of the ancestor in whose garret was found, after his death, some hundreds of dollars, the proceeds of the only slave sale he ever made, not to be touched by him, since no gentleman and Christian should sell a slave, of the third brother who left his fifteen or twenty thousand sandy acres entailed in primogeniture with the hope of making his family permanently distinguished for territorial wealth. In Virginia, poor relationship is almost a cult. A Virginian is no more ashamed of his poor relations than he is of his ancestral home or his coat-of-arms; nor does he draw the line at second cousins—or sixth. A Virginian who denies his poor relations is never to be trusted; he is either a plebeian in disguise or an incurable snob—and he may be both. In the north, and especially in cities, poor relations are apt to be undervalued. Cousinship runs out quickly north of Mason and Dixon's Line, and it is easy to imagine a family in New York or Boston managing by a process of arbitrary elimination to be able finally to boast that it was without a single poor relation. A Virginian would be aghast at such a condition; he would probably advertise for a sixth cousin.

IT IS, indeed, undeniable that poor relations really flourish best in the country. When one finds them in great towns, they are apt to have gravitated to the slums, and to have lost the family point of view. A wealthy family could not better promote its social ambitions than by removing its poor relations from the city and settling them in some quiet country place, where the family once had an ancestral home, however humble. The best poor relations are those who have never left the country. Their quaint old houses, with heirlooms promised to various younger members of the family, are an eloquent tribute to the ancient respectability of the family. Every one has known the magnificent Sheraton sideboard, ruined forever, but indestructible, that stood for fifty years in a country home where everybody was growing old, the beautiful and comfortable Heppelwhite chairs, the oval table of San Domingo mahogany, the andirons of brass, and the accompanying rigid shovel and tongs. How unfortunate the family of means that is without poor relations! They are well worth acquisition by purchase, better much than a counterfeit coat-of-arms, and more convincing than the most magnificent new palace. Some enterprising man should advertise, "Poor Relations Furnished to Order."

A REPATRIATED AMERICAN SCULPTOR

Childish spirit and impetuosity look through the bronze in the portrait bust of the little granddaughter of Mr. Thomas F. Ryan

AMONG the American artists repatriated by the war is the well-known sculptor Rudolph Evans, who, after many years in Europe, returned fresh from the art atmosphere of the Paris studios to place on exhibition in New York a group of figures in bronze and marble, soundly seen and ably modeled, with a feeling for fine development and the normal covering of flesh which should soften the outline of the bony frame of the body. Mr. Evans's work is not over-familiar to the general public, for much of his sculpture is privately owned; the pieces recently on exhibition were loaned by collectors.

Among the large nude figures at this exhibition was "The Golden Hour," which is shown at the lower right on this page, in its fine architectural setting in the garden of Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip. This bronze figure represents the golden hour between girlhood and womanhood. Designed and cast in Paris for Mr. Vanderlip, it won the admiration of the French art commission, who wished to secure it for the Luxembourg. This honor had to be refused as the figure was made for Mr. Vanderlip. The French government ordered a replica, an unusual concession on its part, and it has, moreover, given permission to the artist to copy the figure in marble for the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

SCULPTURED PORTRAITS

This artist is unusually successful in portrait busts. At the top of the page, at the left, is illustrated a charming head of little Miss Ryan, the grandchild of Mr. Thomas F. Ryan. This child looks ready to break into merry speech, so clearly do her bright intelligence and childish impetuosity shine through the bronze. There was a poetic head of young Milton Ailes of Washington, and a charming bust of the granddaughter of Mr. James Stillman; and among the most delightful works in the exhibition was the bronze portrait of Master Frank A. Vanderlip, Jr., with his dog, which is shown at the lower left.

Mr. Evans uses over his bronzes a gold finish such as the ancients adopted. In the case of "The Golden Hour" it has the effect of misty sunlight, and on the Stillman child it reduces all shadows to softness, high lights to velvet.

L A M A I S O N G E O R G E T T E

Pretty Mme. Georgette, "Couturière Née,"

Wears Such Fetching Frocks Herself,

She Has to Copy Them Nine Times Over

for the Many Friends of Her Salons

"JUST a little shorter at the sides. Yes, that's right,"—and Mme. Georgette threw a gratified glance to the mirror which reflected her silhouette. She was standing in one of her pretty salons, surrounded by two or three pretty manikins, while a new garment was being pinned around her—and a pretty new garment it was. It was made of dark blue silk with large stripes of satin of the same shade. The skirt was very short, rather wide, and all plaited. The bodice had, as yet, no sleeves and was cut very low. She wore soft, high, blue kid boots, buttoned straight on each side with light blue mother-of-pearl buttons. Mme. Georgette was in a charming mood, and chatted gaily during her fitting.

FORMERLY OF "MAISON FRANCIS"

The establishment of Georgette et Compagnie was previously the "Maison Francis." Only two years ago did the firm change its name. Mme. Georgette had been with M. Francis for twelve years when he retired from business; he thought he could leave the establishment in no better hands than hers, as her models were always so successful; and it is true that Mme. Georgette is a couturière née. Her mother was a dress-maker, and as far back as she can remember, her daily life has been connected with the affairs of fashion. When she was a little girl, her large brown eyes opened without wonder upon pretty manikins walking leisurely with measured step over soft carpets, and her little hands recognized the softness and richness of beautiful stuffs even before her brain did. Her dolls were dressed like small princesses in fairy tales, and she was so constantly in touch with fashion that it was a natural thing for her to become one of the leaders of Paris fashions as soon as she grew up. Because of these things the responsibility of her position weighs upon her shoulders not at all. She is gay, bright, and has a little way of tossing her head as if to defy years as well, forsooth, as any objection to her ideas.

Mme. Georgette's house was closed for six months after the beginning of the war. She reopened it in January, however, as she had to see a large number of American buyers. In Europe this house is particularly well-known, and in America its models are much liked.

THE WHITE SALON

The salons of the establishment are all decorated in white; there are white carpets, white wall-papers, and white muslin curtains. And, as an interesting detail, there are on the walls pictures that represent costumes of different periods.

Mme. Georgette delights to fashion frocks for the young; that is her specialty. Her models are, therefore, all very simple, with no complexity of trimmings. Although she designs all kinds of frocks, she prefers making afternoon and evening gowns. Her smart silhouette is very familiar at Longchamp and Auteuil, and fashionables are accustomed to look for her in these places with eager interest. In fact, she goes regularly to the races, and every Sunday, in ordinary times, she wears such pretty things that she is asked all next week to reproduce them.

Young and sweet herself, Mme. Georgette sets to work to create a fashion in her own image, and voila!—such frocks as the black moire and Chantilly one above. The lace froths out ever so high above the slim ankles, and the stand-offish collar is ever so high, too. The moire is satin-striped, and is caught with a black and a silver rose

Though the skirts of tailored frocks dare not flare riotously, they are prone to have at least as many plaits as the sketch at the right shows. This frock, which is plain as can be from neck to hem—with only a white rose for trimming—is of blue jersey cloth with a white embroidered collar. To make assurance of fashion doubly sure, there are two blue patent leather belts buckled right trimly at the front

A pretty thing to see, or be seen in, is the black chiffon frock above. A great deal of the bodice is black faille ribbon, and an important part of the skirt is three black faille flowers with a row of fancy stitching as a make-believe stem. The skirt is plaited all over, and across the back there is a pretty drapery almost as full as the skirt

A "couturière née" is Mme. ## STAGES IN THE BUILDING OF A CASTLE

While still in her teens, the talented pupil as a pretty gipsy thief danced her way to pardon and won funds for the New Rochelle Hospital

IT may be assumed as a fact that most people have a certain natural curiosity regarding the evolution of things, be it in regard to the origin of species or as to how Mrs. Vernon Castle learned to dance. The former question is likely to remain largely a question, but the latter can be answered very satisfactorily by Miss Rosetta O'Neill, Mrs. Castle's first and only dancing teacher.

A brief sketch of her famed pupil's training would throw this much of light upon the question of Castle building. Irene Foote was born in New Rochelle, New York, and thereafter spent many happy years there in which she romped and swam and danced, danced first as her fancy dictated, then as her teacher advised—that is, more or less in the manner suggested, for she had the artist's dislike of routine work. At charitable entertainments a dance by Irene Foote became an indispensable part of the program. Her objection to concentrated effort at rehearsals often resulted in missteps, but these she would cover by clever interpolations of her own. It was at one of these charity performances that some unusual fancy dancing attracted the attention of Mrs. Foote, who, when she learned that the dances had been taught by an instructor who lived in New Rochelle, gladly entrusted to her the training of her talented daughter.

THE DANCE TO SUCCESS

From the beginning, the little girl's keen sense of rhythm and natural love of dancing made teaching her both a pleasure and a satisfaction, and she caught new steps with a readiness which surpassed that of her teacher.

In May, 1911, Irene Foote married Vernon Castle Blythe, a young English actor, and the brother-in-law of the well-known English comedian, Lawrence Grosmith. They reached Paris and their first fame as "The Dancers, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle," via a contract signed by Mr. Castle to appear in a Revue there. The Revue was postponed from week to week, which meant a more and more careful counting of those deceptively large copper sous. Fate, in the guise of a kind friend, invited them to supper at the Café de Paris. Fate, as another friend, who had previously witnessed their dancing, asked them to dance, and Monsieur Louis, manager of the Café de Paris and third of the fates controlling the Castle destinies, gave his permission. This was their first cabaret dance, but from that evening they danced very regularly at the supper hour at the Café de Paris, and fashionable Paris appeared nightly to applaud.

In swift succession came their appearances at private entertainments in London, at Louis Martin's in New York, and in the successful musical comedy, "The Sunshine Girl." Then they crossed the ocean again for an engagement at the Café de Paris, which was followed by a Deauville season; finally came a series of teas at Pré-Catalan, where their dancing drew the interest of Miss Elsie de Wolfe and Miss Elizabeth Marbury. Under their kindly direction and the patronage of a dozen of the smartest women of New York, the charming walls of Castle House became a setting within which one might tea and twirl or be taught the dance at its courtliest and smartest artistic best. The latest stones in the Castle structure are the new palais de danse, "Castles in the Air," and the musical comedy "Watch your Step," at both of which the Castles dance nightly.

THE WOMAN BEHIND THE CASTLE

The teacher who gave the training which has imparted so much of grace and charm to Mrs. Castle's dancing, Miss Rosetta O'Neill, did her work well. Mrs. Castle began her dancing education with a thorough training in classical dancing, for with this foundation other dances come easily and gracefully. But far underneath study in classical dancing is yet a deeper foundation, that of exercises. Skill in stepping intricate measures and a knowledge of many dances will not teach grace; grace, even when it is natural and instinctive, as it is with Mrs. Castle, is yet only perfected, and in most people only attained, through long and arduous training. Exercises train the arms to banish rigidity and to express in pretty curves as many emotions as do the feet,—who has not commented upon the graceful eloquence of Mrs. Castle's slim arms? Rhythm is learnt by walking to music of varied tempo,—to see Mrs. Castle walk is an indescribable pleasure. Self-consciousness, brother of awkwardness, is banished by encouraging improvisation in dancing.

Mrs. Castle is one of Miss O'Neill's most famous pupils, but by no means the only one who does her great credit. Miss O'Neill is still teaching, and in addition to her regular classes given in her New York studio, she is planning for this summer a series of dance-play hours at various summer colonies to guide the endless activity of small people along lines of grace.

NOW that English has become a world-engirdling language, the problem of sustaining a standard of pronunciation is much more difficult than in those former centuries when the language was concentrated in England and New England. Increased facility of intercommunication, the daily exchange of news by telegraph and cable, the widespread circulation of magazines, and other influences that tend to knit the English-reading world together, may obviate the danger of the written language breaking up into a myriad of local dialects. But, though the same words may be printed every day in England, the United States, Canada, Australia, and South Africa, how can we make sure that they shall continue to be pronounced the same way, fifty or a hundred years from now, in all of these localities? There is only one institution that is powerful enough and popular enough to sustain an international standard of good usage in the spoken language; and this institution is the stage. The university has already failed in this endeavor; for even now our English language is spoken differently in such great universities as Oxford, Yale, Chicago, California. Not even the professors of English in these institutions conform to a common standard of pronunciation. Our teachers usually speak the local dialect of the community in which they were born.

INTERNATIONAL ENGLISH

But our actors and actresses, at least, should be expected, in playing straight or standard parts, to speak a language that is international. Some of them do; and the speech of scholarly performers like Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and Mr. Otis Skinner affords a constant lesson in good usage to everybody who has ears to hear. But the number of these really great speakers of the English language is continually growing smaller. For one thing, our dramatists, in recent years, have tended more and more to create character parts instead of straight parts and to write their dialogue in a local dialect. No abiding standard of English speech can be sustained upon the stage if the actor is continually required to talk the dialect of Lancashire or Indiana, the slang of Whitechapel or the Bowery. For another thing, a mistaken policy of our theatres has contributed in recent years to the growth of a tendency to employ a speech that is locally British in the reading of all straight or standard parts. Speech that is locally British is in no way preferable to speech that is locally American. Many of the British actors who come to New York speak a dialect that stands no closer to good English than the dialect of Michigan; and many of our American actors make the matter worse by affecting an imitation of the speech of these British visitors. To cite a single detail—the tendency to make a diphthong of every simple vowel that is locally characteristic of London is fully as deplorable as the villainous pronunciation of the “i—r” vowel-sound in “girl” and “first” that is locally characteristic of New York. Good English is neither American nor British; and the speech of those who use the language greatly affords no hint of where they were born. Mr. Walter Hampden was brought up in Brooklyn, New York, and Miss Edith Wynne Matthison was brought up in the midland district of England; but, when these two fine artists in pronunciation appear together, they speak an absolutely common speech that is not local but international.

ALL KINDS AND CONDITIONS OF DIALECTS

Anybody who wishes to hear the French language perfectly pronounced need only attend a performance of the Comédie Française; but in France the effort to sustain a standard is comparatively easy, since the language is concentrated in a small country and the theatre-system is centred in a single city. Our own particular problem is to prevent the theatres of England and America from erecting two discordant standards of pronunciation. Most cultivated people of both countries speak a common language; but the majority of our actors, instead of speaking the language of cultivated people, talk British in a certain type of play and American in a certain other type. In New York, this season, for example, “A Pair of Silk Stockings” was presented in a British dialect and “It Pays to Advertise” was presented in an American dialect; but scarcely a single speech of standard English was spoken in either of these very entertaining and successful plays.

There is, at least, one actress in America who speaks the English language perfectly; and the foregoing remarks have been suggested by the occasion of her recent reappearance in New York. It is always a luxury to listen to Miss Margaret Anglin; and it would be a good thing if all the school-children in America and England could learn from listening to her how the English language really sounds. Miss Anglin was born in Ottawa and brought up in one of the leading families of the Canadian capital; and this is probably a reason why her speech is neither British nor American but absolutely English. Her speech is fully as superior to that of most of the noted actresses who come to us from London as it is to that of most of the popular actresses who have grown up in New York. Not only is her reading perfect in pronunciation, it is also faultless in enunciation; there are no local tricks nor mannerisms in the handling of her voice. If all our actresses and actors could be taught to speak as beautifully as Miss Anglin, there would be no need to fear for the continuance of a noble standard in our English speech.

A VERSATILE ACTRESS

Miss Anglin is one of the most accomplished performers on our stage. She is equally at home with the drama of the Greeks, the drama of the Elizabethan, and the drama of the moderns—equally effective in scenes of laughter and of tears. Moreover, she is willing to act a wide variety of parts, and is not content to appear, season after season, in slightly different repetitions of the same impersonation. She shows us one person in Electra, another person in Rosalind, still another in Mrs. Dane, and a totally different person in the heroine of “Green Stockings.” She is, besides, an excellent stage-director and producer, and is accustomed not only to surround herself with a good supporting company but also to let every member of her company appear before the public to the very best advantage. For all these reasons she must be regarded as one of the most salutary forces in the American theatre of to-day; but her great gift to the public in sustaining a noble and beautiful standard of English speech must be considered, by those who really care about our language, as the most important of all her titles to fame.

“BEVERLY’S BALANCE”

MISS ANGLIN is devoting her spring season to a pleasant little comedy by Mr. Paul Kester, entitled “Beverly’s Balance.” Mr. Kester is a charming and delightful writer; and his return to the theatre after a retirement that has lasted several years is an occasion to be welcomed. The dialogue of the present piece keeps the audience in a ripple of delicate laughter; and this effect is all the more notable because the author has attained it without employing a single word of current slang. Mr.

Kester has been willing to write his play in standard English, and the witty heroine is not required to speak the speech of shop-girls. It must be said, however, that this comedy, though written very daintily, is somewhat flimsily constructed, and that the last act leaves the auditor with a sense of satisfaction incomplete.

Beverly Dinwiddie is a clever girl, of a fine old Virginia family that has become impoverished. She had set out to earn her living as a choir-singer in New York; but, having lost her voice, she is required to ask her cousin, Watt Dinwiddie, for a loan of money. But Watt, who is a lawyer, is as poor as Beverly herself. He has never had a client, and is about to be evicted from his offices.

At this point, a young millionaire friend of Watt's, named J. Courtland Redlaw, turns up to retain him for a delicate negotiation. It appears that Mrs. Redlaw wants a divorce so that she may marry an English nobleman; and Redlaw, being a gentleman, desires Watt Dinwiddie to hire a co-respondent for him, so that Mrs. Redlaw may secure her divorce as quickly and as easily as possible. Beverly, whose relationship to Watt is unknown to Redlaw, applies for the position; and Redlaw agrees to pay her a handsome salary for the privilege of dining with her several times a week in the company of her aunt. By this posture of events a peculiar problem was presented to the playwright. His first act had introduced the audience to two young men, each agreeable in his way, either of whom might be considered eligible as a future husband for the heroine. Mr. Kester chose to decree that Beverly should marry her cousin Watt; and, to this end, he made the heroine devote all her energies throughout the subsequent two acts to the task of effecting a reconciliation between Redlaw and his wife. But, during these two acts, the spectators of the play necessarily saw so much more of Redlaw than of Watt Dinwiddie that they felt rather disappointed in the end when Beverly chose to marry her comparatively inconspicuous and unresourceful cousin. Either Mr. Kester should have given Watt Dinwiddie more to do, or else he should have surrendered to the audience and allowed the heroine to marry the other man.

"THE HYPHEN"

THE theme of "The Hyphen," by Justus Miles Forman, which was the last play produced by Charles Frohman, was the organized effort of German representatives in this country to lure American citizens of German birth away from their allegiance to the constitution of the United States and to enlist them actively in the imperial campaign of frightfulness. As we now look back upon this play, it seems almost prophetic of the terrible catastrophe that robbed us ruthlessly of the lives of the author and the manager.

"The Hyphen" was written in great haste, under stress of immediate emotion, and it was produced with almost unprecedented rapidity. It is not surprising, therefore, that both the play and the performance left so much to be desired. Mr. Forman had built up an excellent reputation as a writer of novels and short stories, but he had had little experience as a playwright, and this hasty effort was comparatively crude. Many deficiencies which, under ordinary circumstances, would have been corrected during the period of rehearsal, were allowed to pass by Mr. Frohman in his desire to set the play at once before the public. The production, therefore, afforded an impression of artistic insincerity that was incompatible with the previous work of so excellent a writer and so eminent a manager.

The debt of the American public to

Mr. Frohman was extremely great. His chief service was to educate an appreciation in this country of the best contemporary plays by British and French authors. He did comparatively little for our native dramatists; but no manager could justly be expected to exhaust the possibilities of his position. His work was worthy; and his service was, within its scope, untiring. The tragic death of Mr. Frohman will be mourned by every theatre-goer in America.

THE NEIGHBORHOOD PLAYHOUSE

TO the insincerity of "The Hyphen" a strong contrast was afforded by the performances at the Neighborhood Playhouse of a company called "The Irish Theatre of America," which is directed by John P. Campbell and Wilford Kane. Both Mr. Kane and Mr. Campbell are excellent actors; and they have assembled a troupe of well-trained players who believe enthusiastically in the worthiness of their work and communicate this belief and this enthusiasm to a responsive audience.

The first item in the composite bill presented by this company was "Lonesome Like," a one-act play by Mr. Harold Brichouse. This piece is written in the Lancashire dialect; for Mr. Brichouse, like the late Stanley Hamilton, belongs to the group of Manchester playwrights discovered and developed by Miss Horniman. "Lonesome Like" is a little masterpiece in structure, in characterization, and in dialogue. The author is gifted with the art of expressing profound emotion in casual conversation that avoids any hint of the sentimental. It seems a pity that so excellent a play, so beautifully acted, should not be shown to the public of Broadway, as well as to the few adventurers who care enough about the fine art of the drama to make a pilgrimage to Grand Street.

"Red Taff," by Mr. Rudolph Mayne, which was the second item in the bill, is an interesting and sad tragedy. The scene is set in the west of Ireland, and the action deals with the struggle of two families to assert their title to a certain bit of bog land. This little play is

BETWEEN THE SUN AND SHADOW

"Halte là!" Commands the Sunshade, and the Advancing Shafts of Sunlight Abandon the Attack to Marvel at Waterproof Chiffon, Zouave Models, Ribs Which Curve In instead of Out, and Parasols of Broadcloth

JUST as in all well-regulated minds concrete fact and latent knowledge are associated and are related to other facts and fancies, so are the adjuncts to the feminine toilet allied in a visible harmony. When skirts are short, boots are correspondingly high; when waists are small, petticoats boast an extra supply of width and ruffles at their hems, that a silhouette may be established and emphasized; when hats are large, sunshades must needs be somewhat larger, and must be fashioned on such lines as will be in accord with prevailing shapes and trimmings.

Last summer the popularity of wide, tip-tilted canotiers with their prodigious aigrets necessitated the flat mandarin parasols; but this year sunshades are small and extremely concave, for the season's hats, for the most part, are conspicuously minute, and the trimmings, except for a vagrant wisp of ribbon or a tiny hybrid rose, conspicuously absent.

OF CHIFFON PAINTED AND WATERPROOF

From the dainty "Marquise," in the middle below, to the prosaic en cas, the parasols for this season are unusually lovely and more than ordinarily durable. Chiffon parasols, painted in birds and flowers, may seem to be fragile bits of femininity, fit for one outing, and then—oblivion. But painted parasols of the daintiest of chiffons and mousselines which have been made waterproof, are among the season's innovations. Oil paints are used for the decoration of these, and the delicate fabrics are treated to a mild process which protects them from a few drops of rain, though it, naturally, in no wise guarantees them against a deluge.

Some of the smartest parasols of the season are made of broadcloth in somewhat vivid shades. A narrow border of crewel embroidery in contrasting colors, relieved with an occasional thread of gold, produces an unusually smart effect, as in the parasol in the middle of the photograph at the upper right. The handles are covered with the embroidered broadcloth, stretched tight over plain wooden sticks, and the parasols are left unlined. A broadcloth gown may boast a parasol to match, these days, though these sunshades are designed to be used with summer gowns as well.

Beach parasols are both practical and pleasing. Two squares of printed cotton of dainty design are superimposed to form an eight-pointed star. Narrow quillings of crisp Valenciennes lace finish the edges, and the handles are of the "crook" variety, lacquered in ivory white.

A number of frilly, ballet-skirted parasols have been designed from white tulle, and make an immensely becoming frame for a pretty face. Some are of tulle plissé, with the tulle caught negligently at intervals to keep it in place, and trimmed with minute blue, white, and red beads in single rows and in patriotic order. Other models have bands of crystal beads—or perhaps a flat binding of navy moire, or a bit of black velvet. One changeable silk model has the taffeta put on in three fairly full puffs. When the parasol is closed, a loose sort of baggy effect is produced, and this model has been quite appropriately named "Zouave." The illustration at the lower right on this page shows two of the most beautiful models made this spring. The one at the left, which is called "La Mer," is of white chiffon tinted and painted to represent waves of the sea in oils of brilliant blues and greens, and drawn loosely over a thin silk foundation. The chiffon is caught to the lining at intervals, emphasizing the movement of the waves, and gray and white sea-gulls flutter about the tinted sky.

IN HONOR OF VOGUE

The parasol on the lower right is named "La Vogue," in honor of this magazine. It is very smart, new, and lovely. Beige tulle over plaited beige tulle over faint rose silk, is the basis of this delightful model. Roses cut from toile de Jouy are applied to the tulle with vivid rose silks, and the narrow scalloped border falls over a double bias of beige tulle. A plain handle of beige lacquer and a shirred cap of apple green velvet about the ferule complete this smartest of sunshades.

On the right, in the illustration at the top of the page, is another of the season's novel parasols. Every alternating rib is depressed to a distance of about six inches from the ferule, while the intermediate ribs curve in the accustomed manner. Violet silk shirred full on the ribs with two double frills of the same silk at the edges makes "La Sirène" an exceedingly pretty model. Clouds of white chiffon line this parasol, and conceal the mechanism of its novel contour.

Of pale saffron silk, painted with saffron roses and clusters of green leaves, is the parasol on the left above. Below the border the silk edge is cut away and a double thickness of creamy mousseline is substituted against it.

The sea furnished the inspiration for the parasol at the left, on which painted gulls in gray and white flutter about a tinted chiffon sky above darker tinted chiffon waves. At the right is a parasol of beige tulle decorated with an appliqué of roses, and named "La Vogue" in honor of this magazine. Parasols, except one in middle of page, from Moulin

TEMPERING THE MAGPIE SCHEME TO THE SUMMER

Breaking the Too Persistent Perspective of Black and White Decoration with Bowls of Flowers and an "Off Color" Piece of Furniture Here and There

THE fancy for black and white has taken so forcible a hold upon summer decoration that there isn't enough English chintz left to satisfy the demands of the people who want it for the furnishing of their summer cottages. It is the most popular scheme of the moment in interior decoration, and lamp-shades of all shapes and sizes, window draperies, cushions, screens, and even rugs are being made after this style.

CHINTZES ON THE WIRE

Like the fad for black carpets, black wall-paper, and similar blacknesses that emanated from Vienna some six or seven years ago, the present vogue also had its origin in the Austrian capital. But it comes to us by way of England, and has the advantage of being less somber in effect than the stuffs formerly produced of which the ground of the material was black and the patterns white. The new fabrics have the black pattern on a white ground, which does away, to a great extent, with the suggestion of mourning black fabrics are apt to convey. The cables have vibrated with anxious queries as to when more of the English materials would be forthcoming. While, owing to the unsettled conditions of transportation, the replies have been more or less vague, it is hoped that a fresh stock will arrive in time for use this season.

One big importing house received its first importation of black and white chintzes a few months ago, and within three days it was practically sold out. Some of the material was made up into shades and other articles, of which there is a fair stock now in the shops. Among the articles to be seen in black and white are charming candle shades of china silk and light weight chintzes in pentagonal, circular, and quadrilateral designs, all trimmed with narrow white silk or cotton fringe. A circular French shade of chintz for a banquet lamp is priced at $6.50; the white enameled standard which accompanies this lamp is priced at $10. In divan cushions there are some curious circular pillows of white and black chintz, and some black pillows on which white applications of filet lace have been made.

ODD PIECES OF CHINA

One of the most recent developments of the fad for black and white china is that the makers have now judiciously limited this style of china to ornamental and odd pieces. A fruit bowl, a bonbonnière, or a chocolate or after-dinner coffee service is very smart in black and white china, but a complete table service, unless possibly a breakfast set, would not be so desirable, and, consequently, not so smart.

S E E N I N T H E S H O P S

SO-CALLED sports clothes have come to embrace country clothes as well, and the most attractive of them are extremely simple. The smart effect that characterizes them comes from the gay colors and the suitable materials used.

Excellent for general country use is the coat of golfine shown at the lower left on this page. Golfine is a ribbed pile fabric finer than corduroy, but much like it. The coat hangs loosely from the shoulders, while a half-belt in the back holds in the fulness at the waist-line. Golfine-covered buttons appear on the belt, the pockets, and the front. This coat is particularly adaptable to many uses as it comes in a wide variety of colors, and is thirty-two inches in length. The white hemp sailor shown with it is smartly trimmed with a fancy braid ornament at one side and a colored and white grosgrain ribbon banded about the crown.

Most unusual is the separate skirt worn with the coat. It has a yoke piped in either green or red linen while the skirt proper is made of white ramie linen, a heavy, rather coarse linen. Through the white linen belt is drawn a very narrow leather belt that matches the color of the piping. The white bone buttons on the skirt are also rimmed in this color. The back of the skirt shows a little fulness where the lower portion joins the yoke.

A NEW WAY OF BELTS

The one-piece dress, shown second from the left at the bottom of the page, is made with straight lines on the Norfolk order. It owes its distinction to clever detail in cut and unusual placing of pockets and plaits. The box plaits in the waist seem to end in pockets just below the belt, and the belt itself, which hangs free and loose, is low in front and high in back. The dress is all in one tone, and comes in a great many shades of an excellent quality of linen. It is particularly attractive in gray linen fastened with smoked pearl buttons.

The top of the brim and the crown of the hat shown with this dress are made of white bangcock straw, thin straw with a wider ply than panama, which has become very popular this season. The facing of the brim may be of dark blue hemp or any color of hemp desired, and a satin ribbon matching the color of the facing encircles the crown.

Probably the most talked-of individual garment this spring has been the smock for gardening and for general country use. A smock has always been used by women who paint and who do gardening, but its possibilities seem to have been realized only this spring by the feminine world at large. Almost every one has rushed into smocks, and we are told that this summer we shall see them used for every conceivable purpose. The one shown in the middle at the bottom of the page is particularly attractive. It may be had, as shown, in white cotton crêpe, smocked in a colored silk, with colored linen collar and cuffs. A white silk and cotton crêpe smock made with black linen collar and cuffs, and with smocking done in black, is particularly smart for mourning. In silk and cotton crêpe of any color desired this smock is priced at $7 and in linen it is $9. In cotton crêpe without any hand smocking on it, it is priced at $5, and a linen one without smocking is $7.

COOLLY THIN AND WIDELY STRIPED

Delightfully cool and pretty is a striped voile dress which appears second from the right below. The stripes are used as a trimming, while a vest of white organdy topped with an organdy collar gives the necessary touch of white demanded by the mode for the bodice. White organdy cuffs finish the three-quarter-length sleeves, while a black patent leather belt completes the costume. This dress may be had in white voile with a stripe one fourth of an inch wide in black, blue, pink, or lavender.

ender. The straight, white hemp sailor worn with the dress has two feather-like ornaments of white moire ribbon as a trimming. This hat, as well as the other hats shown, may be ordered in black and in colors.

One of the three-tier models which are so popular this year is shown at the right below. The material is a lovely white marquisette embroidered in dark blue. A chemisette of very fine white organdy is finely tucked and embroidered in French knots, and each of the tiers to the skirt is finished with an organdy hem. A black velvet girdle ties in a sash with long ends in the back. Black lisère straw and white moire ribbon fashion the hat shown with this dress.

YIELDING AN INCH TO TEMPERATURE

Simple and cool is the flesh colored voile waist illustrated in the middle of the page. The rolling collar of white embroidered organdy is prettily edged with narrow Valenciennes lace. It is just the sort of a waist to wear on a hot summer day, as it is sheer, and while decidedly modish, does not follow the exaggerated high collar that suits ill with extreme heat. With it appears a white hemp hat, trimmed with white faille ribbon; at one side the ribbon forms a rosette quite like a flower. All white is very smart and is in especially high favor for warm weather wear, as its very appearance is refreshing.

The three dresses shown below, especially the one-piece linen frock second from the lower left, are all dresses to wear on the street without a coat. The formal cut of the linen frock, which is coat-like in appearance, makes it particularly adaptable for such use.

Undaunted by sun or wave at Coronado Beach was Miss Louise Fleischmann, daughter of Mr. Julius Fleischmann. She recently played Miss Eleonora Sears in the débutante tennis matches

Chinese influence now extends even to bathing caps of unique and charming type. The plaited frills and the top-knot bow may be of the same or of contrasting colors

Beige rubber with bands and bows of dark blue rubber is used in a model which would lend itself equally well to a combination of the popular black and white

IN THE ANNUAL SOCIAL CONTEST WITH THE WILD WAVES, THE SMART BATHING SUIT IS EVER HALF THE BATTLE

The newest departure in bathing caps, however, is a close-fitting cap of rubberized silk, which makes transparent pretext of shielding the eyes by a wired brim

Shoes, cap, and suit are made to match in this fetching bathing costume of red taffeta, trimmed on each piece with many white braid bands and small white buttons

It may be that the page in "The Man with the Dumb Wife," inspired this costume with checked bands on blue serge tunic and waist and on black satin trousers and hat

Blue bands edge a suit of blue and green striped taffeta. Suits and caps sketched here were specially designed and will be cut to measure for $4 for suits and $1 for caps

All in dark purple is this bathing dress of charmeuse, closely fitted with the opening at the shoulder and underarm. The hem is edged with lighter purple; the collar is white satin

SMART FASHIONS for LIMITED INCOMES

Lest the Blouse-and-Skirt Costume of the Summer Girl Be Omnipresent, Three Frocks Come to Grace the Morning, Noon, and Tea-time of a Summer's Day

Black net is faced with taffeta, and around the top of the crown is a plaiting of white Malines lace that drops in a mushroom effect to the edge of the brim.

AND FOR A SUMMER'S AFTERNOON

Most formal of the three frocks is that sketched at the upper left. This is a handmade frock of organdy and Malines lace, or of white handkerchief linen and an excellent imitation of filet lace. It is optional whether the skirt be as full as shown in the sketch or be made with a plainer front and back and a slight ripple to the lace. Here again, the high neck illustrated may be replaced by a V and a turnover collar of the tucked net of which the chemisette and the sleeve and skirt insets are made. An excellent dressmaker will make this dress to order entirely by hand of handkerchief linen and a good imitation of filet lace over a net foundation, for between $60 and $65, or of organdy for $60. That it is handmade is more than half the charm of such a frock, and the dressmaker suggested insures the best of workmanship.

Note.—To make this department of greater value to the woman of restricted means, Vogue will cut to order, in the stock sizes of 34 to 40 inches bust measure only, patterns in this department at $1 for the skirt, jacket, or bodice and $2 for a suit or gown.

Sheer organdy and Malines lace, ruffle for ruffle; tucked net and organdy, button for button: a frock cool enough for the warmest summer afternoon

FROCKS have been and frocks will be, for there is little that is more appealing in the realm of clothes than summer frocks. To-day the summer girl is often too prone to make a costume of a waist and skirt and a bright colored sweater, and soft frocks for luncheon or afternoon are frequently forgotten. On this page are three frocks of somewhat differing types to break a waist-and-skirt régime.

A COSTUME FOR A SUMMER'S MORNING

The frock sketched at the lower right is plain enough to be used as a morning dress, yet is appropriate for a luncheon. It is a delightful combination of plain and striped, pink and white handkerchief linen. The sleeves and the front panels of the waist and skirt are of plain pink linen, finely tucked in waist and the skirt; the sides are of the striped linen. Filet lace bands finish front and back.

The high collar—of which one should beware, since, though very smart on some women, it is most unbecoming to others—may be followed as in the sketch, or not. Though the high collar has been persistently shown as a new fashion, it has been just as persistently cast aside by those to whom it is not becoming; thus it has become optional whether it is worn or not. This dress could be finished with a V neck and a high turnover collar of filet lace at the back, or, as in the illustration, it may have a plain boned collar of pink handkerchief linen shaped in front into a point above a bow of black velvet. A good dressmaker will make this dress in handkerchief linen as described for $35, furnishing all the materials, and in batiste for $30. The white felt hat sketched with this frock is an excellent finish to a half-morning, half-afternoon costume. It has the wide brim and the flat crown characteristic of the early summer models, and is trimmed with white wool flowers.

FROCK OF MANY TRADES

A pretty frock for crêpe in one of the apricot, porcelain blue, or beige shades is sketched in the middle of the page. This frock also is cut with a high neck, but it would be as smart made with a round neck. The tighter bodice is, of course, the new feature in this dress; indeed, the close bodice marks a departure which even a short time ago seemed most radical, while a year ago we would have stood aghast at anything so simple and beltless as this blouse. It is surprising, however, to see how becomingly these close-bodiced dresses are worn. They should be well made and the edges finished by hand or with a cording. In this frock, Malines lace makes the yoke, and the full sleeves caught at the wrist with a twist of silk cording to match the cords across the front. These cords end with flat crocheted buttons of the same color as the braid. This frock in Georgette crêpe will be made by a reliable dressmaker for $35. If materials are supplied, the making alone will be $20.

It is surprising to see how the millinery has jumped into black and white combinations. White wings on black or dark blue hats were the preeminent mode throughout April and early May, and we find the same contrast in the more summery hats. The hat with the frock in the middle of the page makes possible a most effective black and white combination.

A skirt full, yet close for trimness; a bodice close, yet full for comfort; a hat broad all round for the summer's sun

Pink and white striped linen or batiste, with a front panel of pink linen and bands of filet lace, and a small velvet bow to finish the whole

THE CHOICE FOR PARTY AND FOR PLAY OF

THE VERY YOUNG AND THE VERY SMART

The long skirt and the short waist in a handkerchief linen frock (at the upper left) recall the modes of Mother Hubbard's day. But this is a party dress with rosebuds, net ruffles bound with baby blue ribbon, and a wide blue sash below the wee laced bodice

The bonnet of white straw, pink chif-fon, and pink taffeta roses (second from the top at the left) crowns all desires. Green leaves and stems and black centers to the roses add a bit of contrast all the way 'round

An affair of white net (at the upper right) is belted low with pink satin. The embroidery on the waist and on the bobby ruffles is pink and blue. This and the suit at the lower left of the page, shown by Anne Harmon

A pocketed smocked frock, of blue kindergarten cloth, meets all the needs of a small boy—if one takes his account. This one (the middle of the page) is topped with a linen collar, wide, white, and hemstitched

From the back of a pink and white striped dimity dress (at the lower right) fly out the bows and ends of a white lawn sash, and it can be seen that there are highly valuable pockets placed most handily in the front

Fluted like an accordion and scarlet like a poppy and short as short is the little girl's skirt, and her jacket of blue serge is bound all about with enough narrow black braid to uniform a soldier

An exception that proves the rule of plain blouses is the one of sheer white muslin at the lower left. It is fancy stitched a great deal, and lavishly embroidered in a flower pattern with white thread

At the right, a white linen blouse—of how many is just that said? But newness and trimness and militarism (just enough) are in every line and tuck. Models on this page are from Fairyland

For town wear, the frock of taffeta which simulates a suit is much favored at present

VOGUE patterns are made to meet the requirements of the woman who demands exclusiveness in her wardrobe, yet who refuses to allow her dress allowance to overreach a certain well-considered figure. Each season it becomes a greater problem to make the wardrobe include a suitable gown for each occasion, so numerous and diverse are the social demands. A large wardrobe is required in these days, but not necessarily an expensive one, for with the aid of Vogue patterns the smartness of the French frocks may be achieved in frocks made by a seamstress. The value of Vogue patterns is not only their fashion value; they are unique inasmuch as they are made entirely by hand with each seam marked by a perforated line and because the directions are printed in plain English. Patterns come in three differently colored papers. Gray paper is used for the frock proper, brown paper for the lining, and green paper for the trimmings. It is by such careful details that Vogue has simplified its patterns. Coupled with this is the fashion knowledge that Vogue, as the fashion authority, possesses—and which it weaves into Vogue patterns—long in advance of its acceptance by the many. Advance fashion knowledge is a factor to be carefully considered when planning the wardrobe for the year; it spells economy not only of time, but of money as well. It means that a frock made this year after a Vogue pattern will be a modish possibility for the wardrobe next summer.

TEMPERING THE MAGPIE SCHEME TO THE SUMMER

Indeed, to make successful use of the black and white scheme, there is needed a very definite sense of discretion, for if this is not used the effect of the whole scheme of decoration will surely be insistent, it may even be ludicrous. One need not, indeed, indulge in a complete setting of black and white—many a room may be made very effective by a partial use of black and white. A lamp, a mirror, chintzes, or even wall-papers, of black and white combined with the colors in the furniture and hangings, are often lovely in effect, and are not so difficult as a whole black and white room. The wall-papers following out the black and white scheme are now less startling than those first shown in this connection, which, although undoubtedly effective, were hardly possible to live with. The two examples at the bottom of page 68 indicate the delicacy that is possible with even so decided a contrast as black and white. The one at the lower left is a white ground with a design of conventional flowers set in a stripe, and the one at the lower right is in stripes of graduated widths and depths of tone.

Usually the black and white combination is used in conjunction with Japanese furnishings, particularly with teakwood.

For a summer cottage willow furniture is brought into the composition.

I have written this advertisement about dress shields — I wonder if you will read it.
Marion Buckley

Mr. Conover has asked me to write an advertisement from the woman's point of view. I didn't know exactly what to say; but after quite some thought I decided to write down just the plain facts, unpolished by fine English and stripped of the usual advertising phraseology.

I have been in Mr. Conover's employ for nearly five years. In that time I have had ample opportunity to become thoroughly familiar with every make of dress shield on the market, and with Naiad Dress Shields in particular.

WHAT I FOUND OUT

I learned that Naiad Dress Shields are made from material known exclusively to this Company. This material possesses every waterproofing advantage of pure rubber, without rubber's disadvantages.

Rubber, you know, deteriorates with age. On the dealer's shelves, rubber begins to lose its "life." Naiad Dress Shields contain absolutely no rubber; they are as fresh and good on the day you buy them as on the day they were made.

Moreover, the odor of rubber is offensive to people of refinement. Naiad Shields are absolutely odorless in use.

You can quickly and thoroughly sterilize Naiad Shields by immersing in boiling water a few seconds, and you can then safely press them under a cloth with a heated iron.

And Naiad Shields are so sheer and so dainty that they are inconspicuous, really becoming an actual part of the dress or gown. Yet, because of the material and the design, Naiad Dress Shields give greatest protection.

Ask your dealer or let me send you a pair now while you are thinking about it.

I am absolutely convinced that Naiad Dress Shields are superior to all others. I would like very much to have you try them. If, for any reason, you are not perfectly satisfied, just tell me so and your money will be returned. Every pair is guaranteed.

You can secure Naiads at nearly all stores in the styles shown here. REED & BARTON have produced many beautiful silver forms—among them the Copley pattern shown here.

A glance at the spoon, fork or after-dinner coffee set reveals the smart touch of the tasteful richness which makes the Copley so justly admired.

Every single morning throughout the year, we receive the very latest ideas and fashions in silverware and silver. That's why the new things are found at Reed & Barton's first.

Our "stores of silver" are truly fascinating—you surely ought to visit them before you buy a single anniversary or wedding gift.

Speaking of wedding gifts, can you think of a sweeter offering to a prospective bride than a Dower or Hope Chest like the one pictured here? Sentiment and utility are both beautifully served by such a charming gift.

The Latest Note in Summer Lingerie

is this dainty DeBevoise lace and embroidery Brassiere with pointed sleeves of fine shirred net, lace edged, containing almost invisible "opera-size" Dress-Shields stitched in place so as not to slip or roll up, yet easily removed and replaced. Washable and guaranteed moisture-proof. The Brassiere gives correct support and smart lines to the figure, while presenting a charmingly chic appearance through sheer waists.

You must wear Shields, and you need a Brassiere. Buy them together. No extra corset-cover will be necessary. End the bother and expense of attaching separate Shields to all your Summer gowns and blouses. Simply slip into a DeBevoise Dress-Shield Brassiere and the thing is done. Cool, comfortable, convenient, economical—and superlatively stylish in fit and effect.

Besides a dozen Dress-Shield Brassieres, there are other DeBevoise styles for bathing, dancing, evening wear, etc., in a fascinating variety of Summer materials and trimming. Whatever your figure, there is a DeBevoise Brassiere specially designed to give it the modish contour. The original Brassiere—guaranteed the BEST in fit, workmanship and wear. $1 and upward, at leading drygoods and department stores everywhere. Decline so-called substitutes.

very real in characterization; and the dialogue is eloquently written.

The entertainment was concluded with a two-act comedy entitled "The Double Courtship," which was written by one of the actors in the company, Mr. Seumas O'Connell. This play, though a little weak in plot and structure, is rich in characterization, and is made worth seeing by the admirable acting of the associated players.

When so excellent an entertainment can be exhibited in Grand Street for twenty-five and fifty cents, a lover of the theatre may be pardoned for inquiring why it may not also be presented in Times Square for two dollars. Mr. Whitford Kane is a most accomplished actor, and his company is better trained than the majority of those which run the season on Broadway. Five minutes of a play like "Lonesome Like" are worth more than a whole evening of a play like "The Hyphen."

"JOHN GABRIEL BORKMAN"

IN John Webster's supreme tragedy, "The Duchess of Malfi," the villain, Bosola, who has wounded the Cardinal to death, says as he is dying:—

"I do glory

That thou, which stood'st like a huge pyramid

Begun upon a large and ample base, Shalt end in a little point, a kind of nothing."

This great simile may be applied to the structure of "John Gabriel Borkman." The first two acts are as massive as anything that Ibsen ever wrote; but the drama which was begun upon a large and ample base dwindles gradually to a little point, a kind of nothing. The great master began this play, which was destined to be the last but one of all his dramas, when he was sixty-eight years old. His power held until the task was half completed; then his strength failed him, and a mist, anticipating death, involved his faculties. This impression of "John Gabriel Borkman," derived from many readings, was confirmed by the recent performance of the play by Mr. Emanuel Reicher.

Mr. Reicher was the first of all per-

Ibsen's "Ghosts," in which Virginia Brooks played Regina, proved again that this dramatist had a knack of creating parts in which no performer could appear at a disadvantage formers of the character of Borkman. He acted the part in German, in the presence of the author, before it was ever acted in Norwegian in any of the Scandinavian countries. In his recent performance in New York, Mr. Reicher appeared for the first time on any stage as an actor in the English language. His English, which had been hastily brushed up for this occasion, was adequate in pronunciation and sufficiently fluent in enunciation; but the unaccustomed task of remembering his lines in a foreign language required him to play in a tempo that was invariably slow. At moments when it was evident that he would have read rapidly if he were speaking German, he was unable to accelerate his tempo; and the other performers, following his leadership, were required to read more slowly than they naturally would have done. This insurmountable defect was injurious to the performance as a whole. It was plainly evident, however, that Mr. Reicher was a great actor, and that his conception of the character of Borkman was as massive as the poet's own. So impressive was his play of gesture and of facial expression that many auditors regretted that they were denied the privilege of attending also a performance of the part in German,—in which language Mr. Reicher would have been able to orchestrate his reading in absolute accordance with his superb imagination of the character.

"GHOSTS"

THE greatness of Ibsen as a dramatist is proved conclusively by his ability to create acting parts in which no performer can appear at a disadvantage. Oswald Alving, for example, is a part that, in the slang of the theatre, may be denominated "actor-proof." Any slender young man who is gifted with a modicum of nervous force may make a good impression in this character. Mr. Robert Whittier, who recently presented "Ghosts" at a series of special matinées at the Longacre Theatre, is no exception to the rule. His performance of Oswald was appropriately impressive; and by this performance he increased his reputation as an actor. Unfortunately, the members of the company engaged for this revival were not equally able to rise to the height of the occasion. The play stands or falls by the performance of the subtle and difficult rôle of Mrs. Alving; and those who remembered the great interpretation of this character which was made by Miss Mary Shaw were far from satisfied with the efforts of the latest actress to undertake the part. Regina was excellently played, and so was Engstrand; but the actor engaged for the part of Pastor Manders seemed to be suffering from an insufficiency of rehearsals.

So impressive is Emanuel Reicher's play of facial expression, that his audience recognizes his conception of "John Gabriel Borkman" to be massive as the poet's own

Frantz Premier Electric Cleaner—$25

West of the Rockies $27.50. Dominion of Canada $32.00

ONLY a few years ago, you had no choice about doing housework. You had to use the old broom and duster; you had to toil and fret; you had to turn the house topsy turvy to the discomfiture of the household. That's why the whole family looked forward with dread to the old fashioned Spring housecleaning period.

But that day has happily passed. In over 100,000 homes, efficient housewives clean the Frantz-Premier way—the push button way. They attach this nine pound dirt devourer to any convenient lamp socket, guide it over rugs, carpets, on floors and stairs, and around and under furniture. By 9 A. M. the day's work done. The time they save is theirs to enjoy as they choose. To them Spring cleaning is a thing of the past. They have a clean home every day. They are house managers, who run their house and are not run by it.

You, too, can enjoy this greater freedom by telephoning your nearest dealer for your Frantz-Premier today! You can safely do this because every machine is built complete in our own factory, and its guarantee covers not only mechanical perfection, but insures long, satisfactory service.

Effective hangings for four-post beds are of striped linen with frieze and border copied from a "toile de Jouy" design. Frieze and border are used for the valance and the border edges the curtains. Fabrics from Aldam Heaton & Co., London

CHINTZES from BOND STREET

NOWHERE are prettier stuffs for hangings produced than in England—unless it is in France, and the finest designs made in France cross the channel. Whether or not it is true that the gloomy English climate develops the wits and taste of a people who are constantly striving to outwit it, the fact remains that when it comes to charming country house hangings and decorative stuffs for town house slips and curtains, the English are not to be outdone in matters of choice and taste.

The patterns and weaves put forward recently by the best London decorators show that the tendency is toward the soft gracious effects of the eighteenth century—old toile de Jouy and old Georgian patterns. Manufacturers are showing great skill in reproducing, not only the old designs with their subdued and lovely coloring, but the subtle charm of shifting light and shadow achieved by tricks of weaving that give to the fabric the accidental, personal quality of hand-work.

FACE creams or lotions which are not composed of pure substances, properly compounded so that the skin can easily assimilate them, simply clog the pores and hamper the "respiration" of the skin. Mrs. Adair expounded this truth many years ago. And in presenting the GANESH EASTERN MUSCLE OIL she gave to the women of all nations, a tissue builder so nearly like the natural oils of the skin (by scientific analysis) that it is readily absorbed by the muscles and tissues beneath the skin. It has an immediate strengthening and toning effect, so that regular applications of it keep the tissues in perfect condition.

As a sagging, puffy skin is simply an outward result of tired, sagging underlying muscles, the GANESH EASTERN MUSCLE OIL is a true insurance against skin puffiness, as well as wrinkles and hollow formations. With a betterment of blood circulation about the face, the complexion is also improved.

It is not claimed by Mrs. Adair that the GANESH MUSCLE OIL will make the skin "dazzlingly perfect." It is not a cure-all, nor does it usurp the powers of the other GANESH Preparations. But the GANESH MUSCLE OIL does get at the CAUSE of seventy-five per cent. of all common skin and complexion ills. Directions for "tapping" it into the skin are sent with all bottles, at $5, $2.50 and $1.

The first law in caring for the skin in summer is to keep it cleansed from dust and grime. Use the GANESH BALM CLEANSING CREAM. $3, $1.50, 75c a bottle.

The darkening, burning influence of the summer sun is quickly counteracted by the GANESH LILY SULPHUR LOTION, a perfect whitener. In pink, cream and white. $2.50, $1.50.

For increasing size and firmness of the bust and modeling the neck, the GANESH JUNO, $2.25, $1.25.

Superfluous hair can easily be removed by the root, with the DARA HOME OUTFIT. Complete, $4.50.

For a pronounced double chin, the GANESH CHIN STRAP (illustrated) $5, $6.50. For forehead lines, the GANESH FOREHEAD STRAP, $4, $5.

Price-list booklet describing other GANESH Preparations and Appliances, and Mrs. Adair's own Lecture Book, mailed on request. Those who live within a convenient radius of Fifth Avenue, New York, are invited to take a personal treatment, by adept operators, at Mrs. Adair's cool, inviting Salon.

When there are wrinkles, hollows or discolorations to overcome, the GANESH MUSCLE STRAPPING TREATMENT is administered. Single treatments, $2.50. The GANESH Original ANTI-SEPTIC ELECTROLYSIS TREATMENT FOR SUPERFLUOUS HAIR is effective and harmless. $2.50. The GANESH TREATMENT FOR TIRED, LINED EYES, transforms the redness and dullness to clear whiteness, and smoothes away the tiny crowsfeet. $3.50. Consultation without charge.

Made of fine Silk Jersey, trimmed with imported linen lace. Fastens in front with rustless hooks and eyes. White or flesh color. Sizes, 32 to 46. Retail price, $2.50.

Made of handsome imported lace and satin lining. Fastens in front with rustless hooks and eyes. Sizes, 32 to 46. Retail price, $3.50.

CHINTZES from BOND STREET

The old brocatels, brocaded silks and linens, and other printed tissues that served as hangings for the periods of
Marie Antoinette and the ceremonious
Queen Charlotte, are all available to-day in practical stuffs at practical prices. If they are not, intrinsically, quite what they seem, no one is heard to complain because a beautiful length of "covering silk" after Fontainebleau or Hampton Court is obtained for a few shillings a yard, when the original after which it was designed cost pounds.

OLD DESIGNS IN NEW STUFFS

Particularly has the present interest in old needlework pictures, needlework carpets, chair seats, screens, and various accessories encouraged the revival of the old brocaded linens, a sort of machine reproduction of needlework. These linens have the effect of thick, softly beautiful
"worked" pieces. The simple and well-balanced rose design illustrated at the upper right in the group on this page, is one of these brocaded linens, reproduced from a late eighteenth century stuff which may be seen to-day in the private apartments at Kensington Palace. This pattern is a good example of the beauty of the serene and simple treatment of the flower motive.

The doom of flowered chintzes as such,
was sealed by the wild riot of roses, dahlias, clematis, and every other perennial and annual under the sun, which in the hands of the reckless flowered-chintzapostles turned, for a brief period, every room in the house into a den of appalling cheerfulness and violent unrest. The passing of the floral orgy in chintz sees also the wane of that English fancy, glazed chintz. Glazed chintz is cleanly, of course, so are haircloth, white enamel paint, and linoleum, but for that very reason one is disinclined to do the drawing room in them or use them as decorations for the boudoir. Texture and surface play a great part in the effect of stuffs in a room, and the appeal made by these interestingly woven new-old materials is not to be withstood.

PATTERNS PLEASING AND AMUSING

Present taste in patterned hangings tends toward the well-covered surface, the simple, sometimes curious, and often severe design. Flowers and flower baskets,—Italian, French, or Flemish,—are treated with formality. The accepted new designs show originality expressed after the manner of the old craftsmen.
The coloring may be old, mellow, and harmonious; or it may be bright and clear, with a something in its color juxtapositions that makes it an artistic joy as well as, often, an amusement to the quick eye and the glancing mind.

Days of riotous
naturalistic flowers on chintz are

tionalized designs
are now the thing

NOWHERE TO GO BUT BRIGHTON

A Monologue of Brighton's Season—the Easter Week-end of Fashionable London, to Whom "Dear" Is No Longer Smart, and "Darling" Is the Only Term from One Woman to Another

SIT down, darling, and talk to me while I rest. The average Easter holiday will break down the frailest constitution. Where did I go? Where could anybody go this year but to Brighton. The very name, Zink says, sounds like an alarm-clock going off in Cook's room when she hasn't the faintest idea of getting up. Mmm—I daresay Zink is rather free for a maid, but with George off at Nuneaton with his yeomanry and Zink's brother in the constabulary, we've become frightfully human. Of course, nobody premeditated Brighton. Everybody talked of Cannes and Torquay—did you ever see such darlings as the Devonshire violets this spring?—or of country parties as usual. And everybody turned up at London-by-the-Sea! But with the railways taken over by the Government, people are rather nervous about traveling, aren't they? And as the men-servants are all gone one hesitates about asking people. Lady butlers are so volatile.

A RAINBOW OF MOTORS

So we motored down—Syd Montague and Daisy Oakley and Bertie—in Bertie's new Nile green F. I. A. T.—a wonderful color, a perfect Second Cataract green. I wonder if the rage for colored cars has anything to do with the Queen's encouragement of screaming frocks as an antidote to the general khaki-ness. The front at Brighton looked like a Roman scarf already, when we came along to add our Nile green. Lady Peggy Willowby, who drives herself, you know, rolled up in a Mercedes bright couleur de rose, actually, darling. I saw her afterwards with a sherry-and-bitters sitting in front of the fire at the Metropole wearing a silk jersey—"sweaters" the darling Americans call 'em—equally couleur de rose. Lady Peggy was one of nine hundred and ninety-nine fat women who floated about the Metropole in the new short full skirts, like so many colored balloons. You could just see them all tied together with a string. How can they be fat? Why, darling, I've lost pounds and pounds, thanks to all the benefits and things that have been going on since the war.

Well, here were all these 90 H. P. birds of paradise depositing their more or less fair burdens in the shape of everybody you ever heard of on the steps of the Metropole. One almost believed the hotel people when they said there wasn't so much as a second parlor-maid's room in which to tuck the greatest lady in the whole mob. Just as we got in, Lady de Broke whirled up with a party in a perfect darling of a car—covert color, chauffeur, chow, and all. At the same moment, a frightfully beautiful woman with super-vermilion lips arrived in an orchid colored Mercedes shaped like a Zeppelin. With her was a waxen Frenchman who looked like Boldini but probably wasn't and who had the loveliest Latin time trying to persuade the Metropole to provide some place for the Vermilion Lady to lay her oxygenized head. They were so Pré-Catalanishly picturesque I hated to see them go off in a rage in the rain. Luckily Bertie had booked ahead and we had really magnificent quarters. It is true Zink and I couldn't both get into my room at the same time, but by my standing in the door and Zink in the hall I managed to get hooked up. But one could hear the booming of the surf,—the surf booming the hotel, as Bertie said,—and even see the sea, which was more than the prince regent ever was able to do from his pavilion.

DISHONORABLE USE OF THE WHITE FLAG

Did it rain? Darling, does it ever fail to rain at seaside week-ends in lovely England? We had made a little detour into the woods going down, just to hear the primroses and violets say that spring was here. And so it was for at least five beautiful scented minutes under the trees. But when we got to the sea Bertie recalled that he had heard a cynical Asquithian anemone murmur, "Wait and see." When the exodus began from London the sun shone and there was a Taube-shaped patch of blue in the sky traveling towards Croydon as though it was on its way with a beautiful bit of Easter weather for the Brightonians. Everybody raced after this banner of promise. But it turned out to be only another dishonorable use of the white flag.

The way the weather sobbed and whined was a disgrace. But one must confess, that the Brighton crowd plays good cricket. About a million people had come down to take the marvelous air of London-by-the-Sea, and take it they would. The promenade along the Front was carried out according to program. People walked in twos and threes and solitaires, gaily, their heads bent to the wind as if bowing to affliction, and their umbrellas blown inside out. They were wheeled up and down in Bath chairs in the rain as though that was why they were called Bath chairs. It was all so absurd and amusing that when the National Guards poured in, deepening the gloom by their dull-colored new khaki, it was perfect—one wouldn't have asked for red jackets!

There were heaps of Royalty about—everything from ex-kings to perfectly good dukes and weird great ladies, who hadn't had an English winter for years—Oh, deah, no! It was, I suppose, because there was no other place to go that the crowd this year was so priceless.

A CONTEST OF TYPES

Syd Montague offered a prize of unlimited plovers' eggs—they were just in, you know—to the one who discovered the best type. Daisy Oakley entered a Marchioness who sat for hours, décolletée, in apple-green, in the most conspicuous chair in the foyer and agitated a war puzzle—you know, darling, you try to wobble the Allies into the right holes and they won't wobble!—keeping her eyes all the time desperately fixed on the thing. Bertie thought he had the Marchioness beaten with the Lady who had been Coming to Brighton for Forty Easters and who wore a Titian wig—stitched down the center—of about eighteen summers and was so bescalloped and beflounced that she moved like a float in a political parade. Syd brought his type in from the outside and protested that nothing could be funnier than an English flower girl smiling at one behind a tray of mignonette and Parma violets and wearing a cricket cap with one of

GOODYEAR CORD TIRES

An 11-Year Attainment

The Cord Tire itself is not new. The newness lies in the Goodyear perfections. The English-French type, brought out years ago, never attained great vogue. Its virtues were dimmed by too many shortcomings, including high cost per mile.

But, starting with that, we have for 11 years been constantly working on Cord Tires. This type of construction is rather expensive. So Cord Tires, in cost per tire, exceed other types somewhat. Our aim has been to make extra mileage offset that higher cost.

Multiplying Mileage

Goodyear Cord Tires, to this end, are built greatly oversize. We increased the air capacity by 30 per cent over other cord tires. That, according to accepted formula, adds 75 per cent to the life.

Goodyear Cord Tires have from 6 to 10 cord layers. Our 4-inch Cord Tire is an 8-ply tire. Our larger sizes are 10-ply. That means extreme reinforcement. Goodyear Cord Tires have our No-Rim-Cut feature, which combats a major waste.

These three great improvements—each exclusive to Goodyear—have multiplied Cord Tire mileage. Yet they sacrifice no iota of resiliency or comfort. And they add no extra price. Goodyear Cord Tires cost about the same as others of this type.

Then, to make them utterly secure, we vulcanize 126 braided piano wires into each tire base. Goodyear Cord Tires need no hooks on the base, and have none—those hooks which “freeze” into the rim flange. For front wheels they come with a heavy grooved tread which aids steering. For rear wheels they come with our All-Weather tread, tough and double-thick, with resistless sharp-edged grips. Those are some Goodyear supremacies.

Cord Tire Virtues

Goodyear Cord Tires are tires of super-comfort. They are wondrous shock-absorbers. Never was a Cord Tire more resilient. Never was one better adapted to minimize trouble, give unusual mileage, increase speed and save power.

On electric cars, Cord Tires have long been the only advised pneumatics. Ease and comfort were most appealing there, and power-saving was of prime importance. Goodyear Cord Tires on electric cars add from 25 to 30 per cent to the mileage per charge. Now, with Goodyear improvements, many gasoline car owners are adopting these comfort tires.

When you come to Cord Tires insist on the Goodyear perfections. In them will lie this type's permanent popularity.

Most electric car makers supply Goodyear Cord Tires on request. Most gasoline car makers who do not equip with them will supply them at a little added price. Any Goodyear dealer can get them for you. Any Goodyear branch—in 65 cities—will direct you to a stock.

NOWHERE TO GO BUT BRIGHTON

the new nose veils floating from the vizor. I vacillated between two or three perfect darlings. There was an unpardonably pretty girl who wore the record shortest skirt and Victorian boots and the hardest of Bannockburn tweeds, and who weaved in and out among the crowd,—followed by a dazzled trio in khaki,—without ever taking her hands from her pockets. Perhaps she hadn't any hands—or only rotten ones like mine at bridge.

But I threw the handless baggage out for what Bertie called the Mother and the Gawkie. The Gawkie were three tremulous young girls just ceasing to be young girls—much too tall and trying to conceal the disgrace by stooping a little. Their eyes were large, blue, and scared, and their mouths pensively dished. They wore white muslin frocks and pink and blue ribbons tied in little bibé bows under their chins. They were always waiting on the sofa when Mama—a tiny dimpled woman, all V-neck and vivacity—came down to dinner, and they followed her in to dinner, each one with a novel from the hotel library and a few inscribed and stamped picture post-cards clutched in her hands. I suppose if men are terrifying or terrifyingly few, a grip on a good book gives one confidence, like the hand of a friend, doesn't it, darling?

BORED? “JAMAIS!”

But where was I? Oh, the plovers' eggs! “All have won,” as Alice and then Bertie said, “and all shall have prizes.” But it seems the birds are having a rest this year as there is so little shooting; at least that's what the birds think, and it was only at two shillings apiece that they could be supplied. Bertie said it was like paying two bob for a single gooseberry and a speckled one at that. An old dowager whom everybody knows is frightfully rich was heard making a very sporting proposition to the maitre d'hôtel on the subject of plovers' eggs. They were two shillings each; well, if she ate half a dozen it would be ten and six, what? It is just by keeping a sixpence ahead, darling, that one gets along.

Bored? Jamais! When we got tired of dwelling on how much better women look in day clothes, sitting still making feline remarks, than in evening frocks and dancing, we played chemin de fer, or did the fascinating antique shops of Brighton—one on the King's Road has an irresistible collection of Battersea enamels!—or we walked to Hove, where poor Prince Kropotkin is trying to get well, or we went to hear the magnificent old masses sung at St. Peter's, or to leave sweets for the Indian troops at the Royal Pavilion. For the first time since Nash had the bad taste to design it, the domed and minaretted Pavilion is “in the note.” It stirs the imagination to see a melancholy brown face, crowned by a white turban, leaning out a balcony window, or to catch sight of tall turbaned Sikhs and Sepoys through the trees.

NOTABILITIES AND BOY SCOUTS

Then there were the South Downs—so soothing and vast and undetailed. We motored over the four miles to Rottingdean one day in the rain and saw Sir Edward Carson's baby lambs among several hundred others; it is so lovely and melancholy to hear the faint tinkle of a sheep bell when you are driving through the Downs in the dusk. Sir Edward Carson's house, “Northgate,” stands on the very highest part of the South Downs. The wind rages around it. There isn't a tree or a spear of grass to be seen for miles,—only the brown undulating hills and far off, the white chalk coast and the sea. Kipling lived at Rottingdean, you know, until the Brighton crowd began to invade Rottingdean and gaze speculatively at the high white brick wall which enclosed the abode of the author of “Plain Tales from the Hills.” Now Mr. Rutherford, an American, lives in Kipling's house, and Kipling lives at inaccessible Burwash. William Black,—do you remember “Sabina Zembra”—lived at Rottingdean and is buried in the old churchyard, as is Sir Edward Burne-Jones whose grave was a gay little garden of white-and-gold crocuses. Lady Burne-Jones still lives in the quaint white house facing the green. We watched some children skipping rope there one day to the rhythmic and mendacious “Oliver Cromwell lost his shoe at the Battle of Waterloo.” “What will the children skip to in 2015?” Bertie asked mournfully.

It is wonderful to see the coast at night with all the lights out. Inky black, darling. I shall never forget going out of the brilliantly lighted Metropole after dinner one night and feeling that I had suddenly walked into a tunnel! But the moon came out once stealthily over the Easter week-end. It was about three o'clock in the morning. It threw a silver ribbon into my room, and I stole to the window and looked out. There in the moonlight, guarding the long stretch of coast with a long pole carried like a bayonet over his shoulder, was a little lone boy scout. I felt so safe!

But you have not told me where you spent Easter? In Town? And the sun shone? What did it look like, darling?

WHAT THEY READ

HOW seldom in these days the reader of fiction uses as to a contemporary novelist the phrase "the works of So-and-So!" Folk who still cling to the flattering deception that they are "middle aged" recall the uniform editions of Dickens, Thackeray, and their notable contemporaries. It is the fashion of such folk to say that the novelists of to-day do not attain to "works" in uniform editions because nobody wants their novels after they are a year old. This, however, is not the whole account of the matter. True, most books by contemporary novelists, even above the rank of these who produce "best sellers," are for the day only. Nobody reads the early extravaganzas of Mr. Wells, though they are hardly more than a dozen years behind our present times. Mr. Conrad's small but discriminating clientele, indeed, is faithful to him first and last, and "Lord Jim" is perhaps better beloved than "Chance" or even "The Secret Agent," but Mr. Conrad is a conjurer for his admirers.

It must be owned that the habit and temper of novel readers have much to do with the neglect of even masterly books belonging to another decade, but perhaps the neglect of publishers to provide us with the "works" of current popular authors in uniform editions is even more to be accounted for by the modern method of selling such wares to the highest bidder, through a literary agent. One smiles at the thought of "Jane Eyre" going about in manuscript from one publisher to another, with marks on the wrapper which indicated to each recipient his predecessor. Yet the book was finally published, and it brought profit and fame to that extraordinary little old maid in the gloomy parsonage at Haworth.

The literary agent is a practical person who does not form sentimental attachments for publishers. Now the mid-century novelists loved their publishers, when they did not happen to hate them, and for a novelist to have found a satisfactory publisher was much what it is for a housekeeper—not to compare great things and small—to have found a cook that will "stay." It is true that novelists of the earlier time did often hop about from publisher to publisher, and there were notable cases of novelists being "sold," like baseball players, by one publisher to another. The plates of Washington Irving's works were sold by his Philadelphia publisher to the notable New York house with which he shared the distinguished success of his later years. This incident, however, was not typical of the mid-century period, and the relations of publisher and author were more lasting then than now.

When an author has been long enough successful, he usually manages to form permanent relations with a single publisher, and to have his "works" issued in a uniform edition; but even the works of so distinguished a man as Kipling were widely scattered among publishers before this new distinction was his. It is the fashion of some current critics, and not a few current novelists, to smile down the claims of such men as Thackeray to a distinguished place in letters, and to intimate that the true secret of writing fiction has been vouchsafed to a few persons within the last twenty years. Yet it may be suspected that the "works" of some such novelists, if they ever attain to that distinction, will be gathering dust on the shelves when the best of Thackeray's books are still well thumbed by the new generation. The best, mark you, for Thackeray wrote too much, as did most of his contemporaries. As to later men, those of to-day included, the sifting of time will shortly begin to demonstrate what lasting quality they have. We are all, except the prematurely old, interested in the fiction of our own time, and that of yesterday must have a powerful appeal if it is to claim our admiration and love.

"THE WOODEN HORSE," "Maradick at Forty," "The Gods and Mr. Perrin," "The Prelude to Adventure," "Fortitude," and "The Duchess of Wrexe," all novels by Hugh Walpole, appear now in an authorized American edition; the several volumes are of uniform style, though very different in size. It is something for an author to have achieved "works" at thirty. Mr. Sinclair Lewis, speaking for Walpole's publishers, says that Mr. Walpole is rivaling Wells, Bennett, and Galsworthy, and perhaps most readers will acknowledge that this praise is hardly too strong.

It appears that Mr. Walpole is a native of New Zealand and the son of a bishop, not an impossible combination, though it may sound improbable. For three years of his childhood he lived in New York, and thence he went to Cornwall. He wrote almost from babyhood. His first novel, "The Wooden Horse," he kept in manuscript for years, and at length, when acting as master in an English school, he showed it to a fellow master who pronounced it worthless.

Charles Marriott, the novelist, however, encouraged him to publish the book, and Mr. Walpole, rashly abandoning the school with $150 in his pocket, went up to London determined to be a man of letters. Only seven hundred copies of the book were sold, but Mr. Walpole kept on writing. His first considerable success came with "Fortitude." It ought to have come not later than "The Gods and Mr. Perrin," a rarely discriminating study of schoolmaster life. The "Prelude to Adventure," which also preceded "Fortitude," ought to have made a stronger appeal to the average reader than the latter. "The Duchess of Wrex" is undoubtedly Mr. Walpole's most finished product, a large piece of symbolism with highly realistic details. These books, the product of Mr. Walpole's pen for a dozen years past, are issued in green cloth, with large type, white paper, and bold and tasteful title pages. They are sold at from $1.25 to $1.40 a volume. (New York: George H. Doran Company.)

ANGELA'S BUSINESS, by HENRY SYDNOR HARRISON, shows a ripening of the author's powers as a novelist, though the story lacks some of the qualities that made for the wide popularity of "Queed," and some of the moral fervor that distinguished "V. V.'s Eyes." In this story, Mr. Harrison has more than ever achieved detachment from his puppets. He looks at them all a little quizzically, and can seldom resist the temptation to have a bit of harmless fun at their expense. In this story, too, Mr. Harrison has set his feet upon the earth. The action does not go on in a nebulous nowhere, but in Richmond, the old Confederate capital, though the place is not actually named. Some tenaciously held theory prevents Mr. Harrison from employing local color as a means of obtaining realism, but the names of his people are clearly and characteristically Virginian, and while he will not stoop to put the dialect of the Old Dominion into the mouths of his white folk, he warms our hearts now and then by a bit of absolutely truthful negro dialect.

As to Angela, Mr. Harrison craftily misleads us into supposing that her "business" is that of home-making, that she is the typical domestic woman, sweet, modest, conservative, a lover of the hearth and of children, when in reality she is a contriving little minx, neglectful of her home, selfish toward father, mother, and brother, and having no business except the pursuit of the man, of any man, who will provide her with raiment, food, and shelter. Angela's employment of her slow little "Fordette" in the pursuit, first of the novelist, and then of his friend, is a delicious bit of high comedy done with discrimination and without exaggeration.

As to the contrasted character of Mary Wing, the real business woman, she is admirably and lovingly portrayed. The shocking Miss Trevenna, who has gone off with a married man, or something of the sort, and returned home to be driven out by her parents, hardly appears more than twice, and is merely useful as affecting the fortunes of Miss Wing. The latter takes Miss Trevenna under her—herself, so to speak, and gets into a peck of trouble with the local schoolboard, whose servant she is. In the end, Mary proves quite as domestic a woman as Angela would like to be thought.

Mr. Harrison, some will think, uses Angela a little unfairly to prove his thesis that the old-fashioned woman may be less a home-maker than the new-fashioned. If there is anybody else as clever as he, and not of his opinion about such matters, such clever person could be just as amusing and just as convincing in the demonstration of the opposite thesis. Meanwhile, nobody in America now writing fiction has a more urbane, literate, and deliciously humorous style than Mr. Harrison. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.35 net.)

YOUNG ERNEST, by GILBERT CANNAN, which has for subtitle "The Romance of a Bad Start in Life," is almost as much a tract against conventional marriage as a novel. If conventional marriage is as dull and nasty a thing in lower middle-class British circles as Mr. Cannan pictures it, he is to be congratulated upon breaking a lance against the institution. The household of the Fourmys is really a sickening place, and as sickening as aught else are the confidences of mother and son. Brother George is a crude, coarse, selfish beast, and the vagabond father is just saved from utter blackguardism by his boyish irresponsibility. René, the younger brother—and Mr. Cannan's hero—is an idealist, but his idealism does not save him from marrying a cheap and pretty girl, from whom, like his father, he runs away.

The tale is less squalid when René is removed from the provincial manufacturing town in which he was born. In London, he escapes from the crudities and provincialism of middle-class society by a drop into the slums. Here the story begins to have interest, life, and movement, and René's housekeeping in the "mews" is done with high success and much charm. He is lifted out of all this by the reappearance of an old sweetheart, and that boon to British novelists in difficulties, a belated inheritance. Most American readers will find the realism of lower middle-class life, as shown by Mr. Cannan, extremely repellent, and few will think his thesis against conventional marriage successfully urged, but when he transports his hero to the London slums, one has the sense of emerging from fog into brilliant sunshine. (New York: D. Appleton and Company, $1.35 net.)

THE TURBULENT DUCHESS, by PERCY BREBNER, shows us once more romance in full bloom. The scene is laid in one of the old German duchies, and the period is the latter part of the seventeenth century. As to the duchess she is young, charming, wilful, a ruler in her own right, but under moral constraint to marry. The heir to the throne is her cousin, Prince Karl, whom it is supposed she will marry. The story opens with the duchess in search of a successor to her valued court fool, who has just died. In the second chapter the new fool, found at the end of the first, is established in office, and from that time forward he occupies an important place in the action. A few historical characters appear, among them the Elector of Brandenburg, whose realm joined with

Ask the man at your table what he finds so appealing in Van Camp's Pork and Beans. He is likely to say, "The sauce."

Do you realize what it means to make it?

Tomatoes are grown on certain soils and from special seed. They are picked in their ruddy ripeness.

Then the sauce is seasoned and spiced as per recipes developed by our chefs. It is made to please men, and it does that.

But it never would seem one-half so delightful did we not bake it into the Beans.

But that's only one of the Van Camp attractions.

Another is the beans, which are mealy and whole, fragrant with oven flavor.

Another is ease of digestion. One is never sorry that he ate Van Camp's.

These things are due to modern steam ovens, to hours of baking in a fearful heat. They are impossible at home.

Baked Beans is a man's dish, hearty and nutritious. It is always welcome when you serve it right. And it's very convenient.

Let our chefs help you make this dish attractive. They are baking it now for thousands of places where men eat Beans downtown.

At This Age

Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are confections. And the young child, to make them more like sweetmeats, likes plenty of sugar and cream.

At this age Puffed Grains are ideal. They are whole grains with every granule exploded. The tenderest stomach cannot be taxed by them. And the taste is like toasted nuts.

At This Age

Hungry boys like Puffed Grains in their bowls of milk. And they carry pocketfuls with them, like peanuts, when at play.

They want foods that are all-foods, and want them delightful. These bubbles of grain delight the taste, and every atom feeds. They are perfect between-meal foods.

At This Age

Men like to mix Puffed Grains with berries. And they scatter them on ice cream. Men like blended flavors and modified zests. And these flaky, nut-like, toasted grains form a much-like combination.

Still, folks of all ages like what other ages like in these steam-exploded grains.

WHAT THEY READ

Prussia became the germ of the present German Empire.

Mr. Brebner, although he employs all the well-established accessories of the modern romance of princely fortunes,—intrigue, kidnapping, treachery, and abundant sword play,—avoids the cheapness of style and extravagance of adventure characteristic of many such romances, and makes an excellent story for those who desire to be entertained without being forced to weigh the pros and cons of a modern problem. The "Turbulent Duchess" is probably very unlike any such princess of the seventeenth or any other century, but she is an attractive figure, and some of those about her live and move like real persons. (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, $1.30 net.)

THE HAUNTED HEART, by AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE, follows the accustomed method of the authors, that of creating in advance a special and peculiar atmosphere for the story, and maintaining it throughout by means of judiciously insistent repetition. This time, the atmosphere is maintained in spite of a rather violent change of scene, and the introduction of many characters belonging to a different world from that of the protagonists. One is permanently interested in the two brothers of the tale, and in the cousin who becomes the wife of one. The sister, too, is well indicated, and there is the breath of life in several other characters. On the whole "The Haunted Heart," in spite of its essential improbability, will be recognized as one of the best novels thus far written by these prolific authors. (New York: D. Appleton and Company, $1.35 net.)

APPRECIATIONS AND DEPRECIATIONS

MEMORIES AND MILESTONES, by JOHN JAY CHAPMAN, contains nearly twoscore essays and papers, all strongly characteristic of the author. Two of the papers deal with the question of teaching art, one discusses William James, another Dr. Eliot, and another Julia Ward Howe. There are, besides essays on several members of Mr. Chapman's own family, a delightful short essay on the late Horace Howard Furness, the Shakespearean scholar, whose charming house, with its decorative climber, used to add to the distinction of a famous "square" in Philadelphia, a longer essay on Charles Eliot Norton, other discussions of persons, and two discussions of the negro question, one in connection with the monstrous outrage of a few years ago at Coatesville, Pennsylvania.

In the article on Julia Ward Howe, Mr. Chapman has his own fun at what the vulgar call "cold roast Boston." In some respects, the essay on Dr. Eliot is the most significant in the book. One suspects that Mr. Chapman does not like Dr. Eliot; certainly he disapproves of much that the doctor wrought during his long connection with Harvard. One may hope, however, that Dr. Eliot, as a champion of the Allies, is now endearing himself to Mr. Chapman. Those who think that education is something more than a preparation for making money with ease and speed, will sympathize with much in the essay on Dr. Eliot. Mr. Chapman, as usual, writes with earnestness and humor. He is clear, vigorous, happy in his figures of speech, though now and then he displays something less than the restraint of the surest taste. (New York: Moffat, Yard and Company, $1.25 net.)

KING ALBERT'S BOOK, designed as a symposium by way of tribute to the heroic king of a heroic people, differs from things of the kind in being almost throughout marked by sincerity, and free from the merely perfunctory.

In form, the volume is a nearly square quarto of rather less than two hundred pages, with a portrait of the king for frontispiece, and many illustrations in color from various sources. The introduction, by Hall Caine, is done with taste and sympathy. There follow tributes in prose and verse, some of them expressions of sympathy, others anecdotes or stories of considerable length, some of them mere apt sentiments.

These articles come not only from England, France, and America, but from Italy, Spain, and elsewhere, though naturally not from Germany. The matter in foreign languages is translated into English. Most of the conspicuous English novelists contribute, as do many English statesmen. Among the contributors on this side of the Atlantic are the Honorable Joseph H. Choate, Mr. Winston Churchill, Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, Mr. Charles Dana Gibson, Mr. Howells, Mr. Taft, and Mrs. Edith Wharton. Mr. Gibson's contribution is a pathetic sketch of a Belgian boy. The proceeds from the sale of this book go to the relief of the Belgians. (New York: Hearst's International Library Co., Inc., in cloth, $1.50 net; in full leather, $5 net.)

DEPRECIATIONS, by B. RUSSELL HERTS, is a volume in which the author, a pragmatist in philosophy and an individualist by conviction, does that wise and fascinating thing of writing to please and express himself. One is inclined to say that there should be no other kind of writing, though it is a pity that those who write thus, should, like Mr. Herts, be betrayed into intellectual arrogance. Those who have not swelled the chorus in praise of Mr. Bennett and Mr. Chesterton will heartily agree that Mr. Herts has said of both several things that greatly needed to be said, though he has sometimes fallen into the sin of epigram which he imputes to Mr. Chesterton.

Fortunately, Mr. Herts very seldom resort to paradox, that tempting intellectual dissipation of the clever. His estimate of Mr. Yeats's poetry is acute, and he plucks the heart out of George Moore's mystery, though it is certainly a mistake to pretend that the repute of the Irish race for humor is factitious, just as it is critically unsound to call the author of such a masterpiece as "Esther Waters" a writer of "passable novels." Mr. Herts does not seem to realize that in "the rush of the slavey," so ably described in Moore's "Confessions of a Young Man" was the germ of "Esther Waters," and that in that novel lay a magnificent promise never fulfilled.

Perhaps Mr. Herts will one day disenthroned his present hero, Mr. Wells, surely a shabby enough subject for the rôle. His account of the visit to Wells, as well as of that to Chesterton, has great interest. It will be satisfactory to all whose souls have been stirred by the rumble of the centuries at Whitehall and Westminster Abbey to find Mr. Herts preferring London to the delightful Paris. "The Unmarrying Male" and "The Kingdom of this World" display the author as an extreme individualist, and the latter has a manful cry for freedom of thinking.

The author's wisest thought is that in which he recognizes that the thing which is most likely to pave the way for that solution of the human riddle which he, with all the rest of us, is seeking, lies in the promotion of economic justice among men, but it is a pity that he should not realize that this object may be attained by other means than socialism. At least one reader thinks that the book would have been improved by the omission of the nearly pure nonsense embodied in "Art and Affectation." (New York: Albert & Charles Boni, $1.25 net.)

TO MAKE SURE OF VOGUE

Within the next few weeks, all Vogue's readers will be going posthaste to their summer places; and a goodly number of them will find Vogue hard to buy when they arrive. One may often search in vain along Thames Street in Newport for a copy of Vogue; and in most other summer colonies, Vogue is likewise too much in demand to go around.

To be quite sure of Vogue, either put in an advance order with your summer newsdealer, or arrange with your winter newsdealer to have your copies forwarded. Here, as a memorandum, are the titles, and brief descriptions, of the next three issues:—

In The Country

Number, dated June 15

We used to ask "When are you sailing?" but this season most Americans will stay in this country. The June 15th Vogue will accordingly bring you advance news and photographs from the smart American summer resorts, including a later presentation of the summer mode. And there will be many hints on new devices for the better enjoying of life in the country. Among these will be several pages of luxurious house boats newly designed for Vogue.

Hot Weather Fashions

Number, dated July 1

The new fashions for sultry days either at the seashore or in the mountains. Many photographs of prominent people on their holidays—what they wear and what they do. This number will be like a kaleidoscope of the fashionable summer season. It will include many pages of new gowns made to be worn at the principal summer resorts. This number continues Vogue's series of some of the famous Newport estates.

Hostesses

Number, dated July 15

A review of midsummer entertaining—new ideas for luncheon, teas, dinners, and dances. Unusual menus. Table decorations, lawn fêtes, motor picnics, luncheons al fresco. Further news and pictures of the midsummer mode; what the fashionable world is doing in Newport, Bar Harbor, Long Island and the North Side. Special articles on various places in America that are particularly worth visiting now that Europe is cut off.

Of course, if you subscribe to Vogue you will be quite sure to give us your new address. This would seem a needless precaution, but the Post Office will not forward magazines, as it does letters. Please send us word at least three weeks in advance of the time you want your first copy delivered at the new address. If, however, you depend on a newsdealer, take prompt measures now: otherwise you will not be at all sure of Vogue's next three numbers.

Summer-Fall 1915

By Madame Francis

PARIS DECREES that the foot of Fashion shall be topped, spatted, and slippered in "F. B. & C. Fancy Colored Kids," and voilà! the gray asphalt is turned into a veritable flower-garden as la jeune fille and the fashionable mondaine follow the mode. And such a charming mode it is—in its offering of unlimited possibilities for the carrying out of chic color-schemes, the matching of gowns or hats, or the fascinating "note of repeat" that is gained by colored shoe-trimmings that match the hat or blouse.

No less insistent than Fashion's fiat that shoes shall harmonize with or match the gown in color, is the decree that kid shall take the place of cloth or other materials for topping the high boot, for spats, for both "him" and "her," and for low shoes and their trimmings.

Aside from the military note which demands color, and color-combinations, there is a deeper reason for Fashion's return to kid. Cloth stretches and gets out of shape, whereas the top or spat of kid, because of its pliable qualities, gives a trim, close-fitting effect that emphasizes the beauty-line of foot and ankle. Then, too, cloth, because of its over-popularity, is passé, and the manufacturer of the ultra-smart must needs employ kid to mark the vintage of his shoes strictly 1915.

While "F. B. & C." Pearl, Sand, Putty, Blue and Green in various combinations are all "good style," the most distracting models, that make you lie awake wanting them, are shown in "F. B. & C. Bronze Kid" and "F. B. & C. Golden Brown Kid, Color No. 21." Because of their strict "neutrality," these rich colors harmonize with gowns of any shade and have the additional advantage of being appropriate for both street and "dress" wear. Combinations of "F. B. & C. Bronze Kid" or "F. B. & C. Golden Brown Kid, Color No. 21" Vamps with Café au Lait or Champagne-Color Tops are irresistible, but whatever you may choose—a delightful model that laces up the back, an inside or front lace, or a low shoe—you have enough variety in color and color-combinations to get just the right boot or shoe for your costume.

WHAT THEY READ

PLAYS AND PLAYWRIGHTS

DEATH AND THE FOOL, by HUGO VON HOFMANNSTHAL, the Austrian symbolic poet, is given to us in English verse by Elizabeth Walter. The translator also prefaces the tiny one-act play with a sketch of the author and a brief critical estimate of his work. One need not believe symbolism the sole mode of literary expression to feel the power and interest of Hofmannsthal's drama even in translation. It is a most moving piece of work. Perhaps the passages that will most strongly move many readers are those assigned to the Mother and those to the Girl, the former possibly even more than the latter. Death's passages, however, are solemnly beautiful, and, indeed, the whole play is impressive and convincing. As to the translator's work, it is nearly all good, and there are passages that she has rendered with striking poetical beauty, though she has seldom risen to the lyric heights with which she credits the author. (Boston: Richard G. Badger, 75 cents net.)

CHIEF CONTEMPORARY DRAMATISTS, selected and edited by Thomas H. Dickinson, associate professor of English in the University of Wisconsin, is a handsome royal octavo volume of nearly seven hundred pages, containing twenty plays, mostly written within the last quarter-century, many of them within the last decade. The compiler explains in an introduction, somewhat heavily learned in style, that he uses the word "contemporary" not so much in its temporal connotation as to indicate dramatists whose work is in spirit that of the present era. Some who have recently seen or read Wilde's brilliant "Lady Windermere's Fan" would be inclined to cavil at the inclusion of that play, even though it is less than twenty-five years old, because, with all its sparkle, it seems a bit old-fashioned. Professor Dickinson includes nothing of Barrie or of Shaw, but supplies hints for the study of those dramatists. Some of his selections, he tells us, were dictated by the authors themselves. The men represented are not only English, Irish, and American, but German, French, Belgian, Norse, Swedish, and Russian.

Fitch, Moody, Thomas, and MacKaye are the Americans represented. The volume is an interesting and highly significant collection, and one that will especially attract young persons sensitive to the movements of their own time, and quickly responsive to the charm and significance of individual plays. Professor Dickinson's task of choosing was one of notable difficulty, and both he and the publishers have rendered an important service to all intelligent lovers of the drama. It is interesting to reflect that it is more than two centuries since so significant a book of this quality could have been compiled from acting plays mostly of British origin. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, $2.75 net.)

TWO BOOKS FROM THE NON-FICTION SHELF

THE TRUTH ABOUT TWILIGHT SLEEP, by HANNA RION (Mrs. Frank Ver Beck) presents the author's view as to a much controverted matter of the highest importance, together with evidence on both sides, and some of the arguments for and against. Mrs. Ver Beck's opinions are founded upon actual study and observation on the Continent and in Great Britain. Dr. Gauss of Freiburg, while yet a very young man, hit upon the method of painless childbirth known as twilight sleep. The method has been successfully used at the Woman's Hospital, Freiburg, for some years past, and in many parts of Europe, in Japan, and in South America.

If we may trust to the evidence that has been obtained by Mrs. Ver Beck, the method is without danger to either mother or child. It is frankly admitted that some children brought into the world by this method are dull and drowsy for some time, but it is the experience of Dr. Gauss that they almost invariably come out of this condition without aid from the physician. Some of the older German physicians have assailed the method, and some notable American physicians have declared against it. There is a strong weight of British opinion, however, on the side of twilight sleep, and Mrs. Ver Beck, after her personal investigations, strongly advocates the method as saving women from one of the cruelest sufferings in human experience.

Dr. Gauss has been accustomed to prepare the expectant mother by injections of scopolamin (an alkaline narcotic) and morphine. The effect of these drugs is to make the patient drowsy, reduce the sensitiveness to pain, and suspend the memory. As the use of these drugs requires the greatest skill and care, and scopolamin is somewhat uncertain in its action, a new combination was sought and found, which requires less careful handling, and is more certain in its results. Mrs. Ver Beck presents her case in a volume of nearly four hundred pages, with extracts from notes made at Freiburg, where the method was used in more than five thousand cases, and many of the mothers upon coming from under the influence of the drug could not believe that their children had been already born. (New York: McBride, Nast and Co., $1.50 net.)

WHAT IS CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, by THOMAS W. WILBY, seems to be an attempt to present Mrs. Eddy's doctrines freed from the language that repelled many from her famous book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Mr. Wilby bates nothing of Mrs. Eddy's claims for her philosophy, but sets them forth in every-day language, and with the utmost clearness. He takes the opportunity in his preface to bring some recent scientific theories into relation with the faith that Mrs. Eddy taught.

He calls his book a popular presentation of Christian Science, but it is more than that, since it makes direct appeal to such as find "Science and Health" confused and unconvincing. No one can call Mr. Wilby's little volume confused, though many may fail to find it convincing. He undertakes to show that man is purely a spirit, and that matter, whether existing in the world about us or in our own bodies, is a false conception of "mortal mind." A little more than half the book is given up to the discussion of man as a spirit, and matter as non-existent.

Part Second of the book has to do with Christian Science healing, and here the author rigorously distinguishes it from mind cure, as ordinarily understood. In the chapter entitled "Christian Science and Social Problems," the author undertakes to show the relation of his faith to the problem of poverty and the question of opportunity. The appearance of such a book is significant perhaps of a new phase in the development of the faith taught by Mrs. Eddy, and so widely accepted. (New York: John Lane Company, 75 cents.)

ERRATUM

In the April 1 issue of Vogue the decorations and furnishings of the salon in the Bandbox Theatre were credited to Miss Elsie de Wolfe. This was an error, as these decorations were the work of Miss Gertrude Gheen, who was formerly associated with Miss de Wolfe.

WE have reproduced in "Waterfall," one of the most delightful of Cheruit's evening coats, down to its most exact detail.

Sporting a be-flowered lining and banded in velvet to give it color contrast and character, this wrap is already one of the season's favorites, and is procurable at all the smart shops and department stores.

Little by little the inscrutable east reveals to the west its fascinating dark secrets of incense-breathing balm and stealing odors

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

THE door of the east is open to those who will step within a certain oriental shop on Fifth Avenue, where jewels and bibelots of the east and strange incenses carry one seven thousand miles in seven seconds. Fabrics, embroideries, and art objects from the orient are familiar to us, but rarely are oriental toilet accessories seen on occidental dressing-tables. This shop, however, offers the creams, powders, sachets, and perfumes of the east adapted to the uses of the woman of the west.

Representative, though inexpensive, is the box of perfumes shown on this page. A box of Japanese straw painted gray and black and white holds three triangular two-ounce bottles, each filled with a delicate perfume, and each named a name to entice the lover of sweet scents. The box and its contents are priced at $1.

INCENSE FOR THE BOUDOIR

The tiny brazier of aromatic coals has long had a place in the boudoir of the Parisienne, but it is only recently that the American woman has followed her example and diffused her favorite perfume by burning incense in a device like that shown at the top of this page. This Japanese koro, which measures five and one quarter by four and one quarter inches, may be obtained in three finishes, brass, dark green, and antique bronze, for $2.25. This is one among many designs which range in price from $1 to $5,000.

Incense such as has been used for ages in eastern temples is purchasable in four-ounce boxes for 50 cents and in eight-ounce boxes for 90 cents. This incense is prettily cased in a green box, tied with gold cord, sealed at one side, and ornamented on top with a Japanese coin. The same firm puts up a special set consisting of a four-ounce package of incense with an incense burner for $1 or $2, according to the style of the burner.

Those women for whom sandalwood has a peculiar charm, may have a bundle of three blocks to slip among linens and lingerie. The perfume of these blocks is very lasting, and the price is 25 cents a bundle. A lotus flower extract in a bottle covered with Madagascar cloth is another delight for the dressing-table. It may be bought for 50 cents, 90 cents, or $1.50, according to size.

A NEW-OLD COLOGNE

An eau de Cologne of French ancestry has recently been presented to New York. This is the story told of it: A certain marshal of France, under King Louis XIV, had a debtor an old apothecary. In settlement of the debt there was given him, among other odds and sundries, a recipe for a perfume. The prized recipe passed to the marshal's son, one of the gallant captains who journeyed to America with the Marquis de Lafayette. Later the captain sought a home in Canada. Among the possessions which he took with him was a Bible wherein was treasured the perfume recipe. This holy book descended from generation to generation, until it was inherited by the present owner, who holds it in trust for her son. The beaux and belles of royal France looked with much favor upon this cologne; clothes-presses crowded with laces, silks, and linens gave evidence of its use; it was an accepted complement of the toilette.

Only the purest wine spirits are used to preserve the floral odors in this perfume, and because of the strength of the alcohol, this cologne may be diluted with distilled water. In fact, the original recipe directs that "the perfume be further diluted, when necessary, by water in which a poker, heated to redness, be plunged." This new-old toilet acquisition is put up in eight-ounce bottles for $1.50 a bottle.

THE ENEMY WITHOUT WINS

"Pressure from without is the enemy of pressure from within." This is the belief that guides the fingers of a certain skin specialist in New York who has a small and smart establishment on Fifth Avenue. This specialist gives her personal attention to each and every patron. Her facial treatment, which is the result of much study under famous skin specialists at the Sorbonne in Paris, requires but twenty minutes, yet in this short space of time a marvelous change is wrought. The treatment, as beneficial as it is expedient, is conducted simply with a series of cleverly shaped ivory rollers and a small vacuum implement, but the skill with which they are manipulated is a revelation. Clear, rosy, soft as velvet, and exquisitely transparent, the skin emerges from this process. A charge of $10 is made for six of these treatments.

Sometimes, for the best effect, the fatty deposits about the face require a chin strap or a local band. These bands have been designed on accurate anatomical lines by a French doctor. They are made of silk, batiste, or rubber, and are priced at $5 and up. A certain crème aux marrons which is shown among many other excellent creams and lotions, is made from large ripe chestnuts and is very popular with patrons of this establishment. It bleaches the skin and tightens the muscles; it is priced at $2 a jar.

Note.—Readers of Vogue inquiring for names of shops where dressing-table articles are purchasable should enclose a stamped and addressed envelope for reply, and state page and date.

MOTOR NOTES

THE increase in the capacity of runabouts from two to three passengers has been one of the features of modern roadster design, but to add to a single-seat roadster accommodations for four additional persons is somewhat of a novelty. Such is the design that has been produced by the distributor for a popular make of a medium-priced car, and this with no loss in the graceful stream-line effect of the runabout body. The regular seat of this car accommodates but two persons, and when seating only two the vehicle possesses the appearance of the ordinary runabout. However, an additional seat extends over each running-board, and these are somewhat lower than the main seats in the body of the car. Comfortable upholstery and folding backs make for much easier riding than might be expected. When not in use, these seats are shoved into place in a drawer-like compartment underneath the main seats, and as their outside edge is flush with the surface, there is no break in the contour of the body. The third and fourth extra persons are accommodated in a double seat that folds up and back from the turtle-deck of the roadster. This, too, when not in use, folds down and blends into the outline of the car and is, in reality, a part of the rear compartment in which tires, tools, and baggage may be carried.

REFLECTED LIGHT

The universal use of electric starting systems on all medium and high-priced American cars has enabled body builders to design the interior of closed vehicles with almost as elaborate and artistic lighting effects as will be found in the owners' homes. A plentiful supply of current must be obtained for the starting mechanism, and therefore the electric generators driven by the motors are made of ample size, and they furnish and store power for a number of lights in addition to those that are necessary for ordinary driving. Overhead dome lights in limousines and sedans, and corner reading lamps have been familiar for several years, but the most recent innovation is the application of the indirect lighting system to the roof of a closed car. This is the regular equipment on one of the high-priced cars, and consists of a silver and glass fixture containing three frosted electric light bulbs. Above this fixture is mounted a handsome ivory-enameled reflector that is so designed as to diffuse the rays equally to all portions of the car. In this manner the glare of direct illumination is softened and the efficiency of the lighting outfit is not reduced.

PICNICS À LA CARTE

Because the modern motor-car is no longer subject to the break-downs that made it necessary for the first cars to be driven only on frequented highways, the pleasure car is becoming a popular vehicle for outings and picnics in out-of-the-way places. Thus, luncheon outfits, folding tables, and compact ice chests have become a necessary part of the true tourist's equipment. Such an outfit, however, provides only for the use of previously cooked foods. But there has been placed on the market a special form of portable stove so designed as to shape and size that it may be easily stowed on the floor of the tonneau. When not in use, it is packed in a metal crate support, measuring ten and a half by eighteen by twenty-one and a half inches, and weighing twenty-five pounds. Three sections of a stovepipe and two fixtures that hold the parts of the stove in place may be stowed in the fire-box compartment when not in use. The entire outfit is no more bulky than any box of the dimensions given. Only a few moments are required to erect the stove on the crate, which replaces a base or legs; the stove burns wood. The cost of this outfit complete is $7.50.

WAX ON WANING BODIES

Marvelous machines, seeming almost human in intelligence and action, have reduced the cost of motor-car manufacture to a minimum. The finish of a motor-car, however, can not be done by machine, and the body still requires as much attention as was the case when the industry was in its infancy. In fact, twenty, and even twenty-five coats of paint and varnish are applied to an automobile body in order to obtain the desired permanency of finish and luster that will not be affected by the action of sun, water, or mud. Since a car is used under exposed conditions, the highly finished portions of the body really require more attention than the most highly polished piece of furniture, and they should be treated with proportionate care. A large manufacturer of floor and furniture varnish has announced that wax is an excellent preservative for the finish of a motor-car, and that, in fact, successive coats will serve to build up the varnish and paint where it becomes partially worn through by excessive use. Such a finish is water-proof and produces a high gloss from which dust and dirt are easily removed without leaving any marks. The application of a single coat of wax will last through four or five washings before a renewal of the wax coating will be found necessary.

THE CONVERTIBLE CURTAIN

The improvement in tops and in side curtains has rendered the ordinary touring-car as water-tight as the limousine. With the usual top and curtains, however, an elaborate process must be gone through before either the forward or rear compartments may be opened for entrance or exit. This is due to the fact that the doors are independent of the curtains, which are attached to each other and to the top in such a manner that several fasteners must be loosened before the proper curtain can be swung aside. By means of an ingenious device, however, consisting of a bracket clamped in place by thumb nuts, and a black-enameled, narrow plate permanently secured to the edge of the car door, the curtain may be made to be a part of the door itself, and to swing open and shut as though the door were full-length like those on limousines and sedans. The price of this auxiliary frame to which the door curtain may be attached is $1.50 for one, or $6 for the set that converts all four doors of a car into the one-piece type.

THE NAME "VOGUE"

—it has been used without our consent by certain manufacturers who seek to make capital out of the prestige of Vogue, the magazine.

THE title "Vogue" has a two-fold value. First, the intrinsic value of the word itself, with its suggestion of smartness and distinction. Second, and more important, the word "Vogue" has the added value of its long association with Vogue, the magazine.

Now we find that certain manufacturers are using "Vogue" as a trade-name for all kinds of miscellaneous merchandise. There are "Vogue" candies, and "Vogue" rouges, and "Vogue" hats, and various other things, good, bad and indifferent, all labelled with the title "Vogue."

It may be the desire of the makers of these things subtly to trade on the reputation and prestige of Vogue, the magazine. Their purpose may be to convey the idea that Vogue is in some way responsible for them.

Vogue is not responsible! Vogue has not launched out into manufacturing. If on the counter of your favorite store you find anything labelled "Vogue," do not buy it in the belief that Vogue has made it, or that Vogue recommends it.

Except Vogue itself, and Vogue Dress Patterns, no article that bears this name has any connection with us.

So, while we cannot prevent the promiscuous use of the name "Vogue," we can at least forestall possible disappointment on your part, should you be led to buy a product marked "Vogue" believing that The Vogue Company is its sponsor.

We believe it a part of our duty, moreover, to point out from time to time that various articles of merchandise called "Vogue" are not backed by Vogue, the magazine; and that it is not safe to accept them on the assumption that they are as desirable as the name might at first glance imply.

VANITY FAIR

"For a musician, or for a foreigner living in the United States, there is no better way to keep in touch with the progress of American life than to be a constant reader of Vanity Fair."

—FRITZ KREISLER.

Coming from an extremely intellectual foreigner, who is specially distinguished in one of the arts, this little message from Fritz Kreisler will suggest to you that Vanity Fair has an informative and even a serious side.

You have no doubt enjoyed the light, satiric and frivolous side of Vanity Fair. At the same time—as you will soon discover from the June number, now ready—Vanity Fair is a trustworthy review of what is going on in the artistic and intellectual centers of this country.

Among many shorter essays in this June number, you will find an article by the Hon. W. Bourke Cockran on "The Return of the Norman to France"—one of the strangest phenomena of the great war. Though kind hearts are more than coronets, it is a fact that coronets are bearing the chief burden of England's war; and now, after eight hundred years, the Norman blood of England has returned to fight in the very place from which it sailed with the Conqueror.

Another subject of growing interest to every thoughtful American is the part that this country will play in the great readjustment that will follow the war. Frederick James Gregg writes in the June Vanity Fair on this subject; foreshadowing the part that the United States will play in the peace conference, and discussing the growing importance of President Wilson as a world figure.

"SERVICE" is a fine word, but a much-abused one. In these days, when this respectable word is bandied about at the mercy of everyone, one hesitates a little to apply it to such a fresh and unusual magazine as Vanity Fair. But it so happens that Vanity Fair is two magazines in one—a magazine to use, as well as a magazine to read. On the one hand, it is a gay, picturesque and informative review of outdoor sports, of the theatre, of the fine arts, of society, and of good taste in dress. On the other hand, Vanity Fair is as useful and serviceable as any of the professionally practical magazines.

Simply for the sake of refreshing your memory in case you have not recently looked through Vanity Fair, here are some of the striking and unusual services that Vanity Fair offers you:

"WHERE TO LIVE"

In addition to a most interesting directory of real estate opportunities—the kind of directory you have hitherto found only in the English magazines—Vanity Fair will do any special investigating you desire, and will gladly help you to find a house or apartment for the summer or any other season.

"THE DOG MART"

Vanity Fair not only publishes announcements from the leading kennels of America, but gives any desired advice on the care or breeding of dogs, and is ready to buy them on request for its readers.

"VANITY FAIR SHOPPERS"

This is Vanity Fair's personal New York shopping service. Many men, especially, have come to regard it as an indispensable link with the shops that offer not only what they want for themselves, but what they are only too glad to find as presents for other men, for women, and for children.

"THE WELL-DRESSED MAN"

A page or two each month is devoted to the really new and good things in men's clothes—avoiding the freakish and unbecoming, and illustrating the best things shown by the leading New York tailors and haberdashers. The editors of this department will give any desired advice, and are ready to shop personally for their readers.

"AUTOMOBILES"

Vanity Fair invites correspondence with its readers on any matters of motor interest, and maintains a department for the purpose of securing catalogues, aiding in the purchasing of cars, describing accessories, and keeping you informed on the latest novelties of the automobile world.

"OUTDOOR SPORTS"

Vanity Fair will buy any kind of sports clothes or accessories—from golf balls to fishing tackle—will give the reader any possible advice in selecting hotels, in arranging trips to the leading golf and tennis tournaments, or to shooting and fishing resorts in the appropriate seasons.

THESE are but a very few of the things that Vanity Fair is ready to do for you. On almost every page you will find a suggestion or an invitation. To read Vanity Fair at all is to find that Vanity Fair is prepared to secure prompt, trustworthy and accurate advice about a host of subjects that are often very difficult to look up through other sources. When in doubt ask Vanity Fair!

Vanity Fair for June is now on sale. Look for the Leyendecker cover. But you may find this number somewhat hard to find; at many newsstands the demand is far in excess of the supply. Remember to tell the newsdealer to put your name down for the July number, and all the other summer and autumn numbers that will follow.

Buy Wolf Undermuslins at the June Sales

The nightgowns and petticoats we manufacture are trademarked. ## THE WOLF COMPANY

364 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

A mannish model with feminine inclinations is trim in handkerchief linen and black moire ribbon; price, 50 cents

AT BODICE TOP and BOTTOM

Over black moire ribbon patterned with gilt braid are embroidered white organdy bands bound with blue linen; $2.95

Just sufficiently military to be attractive is a collar of white moire bound with blue braid and embroidered in red, yellow, and blue silk; $2.95

For wear with tub frocks there comes a pleasing collar, of hand-embroidered piqué with button-holed edge; price, 50 cents

MANY of the prettiest pieces of French neckwear which have recently been imported have been carefully and accurately copied at one of the Fifth Avenue shops, and a few of these copies are shown on this page. At the top of the page is a high collar of fine handkerchief linen which opens in front to give greater freedom and has a double turnover which is quite unusual. A narrow black moire ribbon finishes the collar and ties in a flat pump bow in the front. A pretty collar to wear with the coat of a suit is illustrated in the middle of the second line.

We shall see a great many more belts this year than in several seasons, for many of the prettiest frocks and suits have a smart leather belt as a finish at the waistline, though the separate skirt and blouse are seldom belted. These belts range from the very narrow widths to soft wide belts, a few models of which are shown at the bottom of this page.

Crisp and frilly is this chemisette of fine batiste with high collar turned back in deep points and bound with blue batiste and a vest fastening with gilt ball buttons; $2.95

The regimental belt is of black calfskin with gold-plated buckle. It may also be had in patent leather with nickel or gun-metal buckle; price 1 in., 95 cents; 1½ in., $1.50; 2 in., $1.95

Wide soft belts may be of suede, lined with white moire and fastened by two gilt buckles on each side. Width, 5½ in.; black, green, tan, or peacock blue; $8.50

Of three belts of narrow mind the first is of black morocco, gold buckled (plate) and piped with white kid; 1½ in., $3. The second is of morocco, with pearl-tipped tan suede stripe; 1½ in., $2.75. The third comes in black or colors in cross-grain and patent leather with pearl buckle and two pearl rings in back; 1½ in., $4.50

BEFORE the FACE of WOMAN

A SMART New York shop has imported this season a large variety of French veilings, some of which are hand-run, others have chenille dots, while still simpler ones are merely a plain square mesh, known as the filet mesh, such as the veil shown in the circle on this page. A made veil with an elastic top which will keep it in shape around the brim of the hat is a useful novelty, which is illustrated in the top photograph on this page.

The French chenille dot veiling, which is so generally becoming, is shown in the illustration at the left just below the made veil described above; it may be had in black, flesh, brown, sand, taupe, navy, and white. To the right, in the second row from the top, is a particularly smart hexagonal mesh veiling with good sized triangular velvet dots. This veiling comes with finished edges, in the usual veil length, and is to be had in black only.

To the left at the bottom of the page is a charming design, which combines a chenille dot in a chenille ring. This may be had in black, navy, taupe, or brown. At the right, at the bottom of the page, is one of the most effective hand-run patterns which have been shown this season. The square filet mesh veiling is used as a foundation, and the veil comes in black, brown, navy, or taupe. It is unusual to find hand-run veiling at a price that may be called reasonable, and when this does happen, the pattern often fails to be attractive. The majority of the fine hand-run veils worn by smart women come only in the made veils, which are about one and a half yards long, and the price of these in attractive patterns ranges from $3.75 or $4 up. In the case of the veil just described, while the pattern is a simple one, which probably accounts for the reasonable price, it is so cleverly arranged that it is not monotonous.

A made veil, daintily embroidered, has a finished edge and an elastic top to fit closely to the hat; in black, $1.75; in navy blue, brown, or taupe, $2.75

Always smart and always in good taste is the French chenille dot veiling, at 95 cents a yard

Hexagonal mesh veils with triangular dots at far distances come in black with finished edges; $2.95

Veiling of fine mesh with chenille dots - sometimes circled by chenille rings; price, $1.75 a yard

Entirely plain and absolutely correct is the filet mesh veiling which comes in various colors at 35 cents a yard

A filet mesh veiling with an attractive hand-run vine pattern may be had at $1.25 a yard

General utility coat of fine Shantung silk, for midsummer wear. Price $25.00.

ART NOTES

PROLIFIC of art events has been the fagend of this slow-moving art season. American artists have made merry at the Folsom Galleries in the first exhibition of the American Salon of Humorists, which is treated in detail on pages 38 and 39; the Allied Artists of America have attained to the dignity of an exhibition in the Fine Arts Building, which will continue through May 26 and will be noted in a later issue, and other exhibitions of note have been many.

SCULPTURE BY AMERICAN WOMEN

At the Gorham Galleries throughout May, sixty-nine women sculptors present an interesting collection of recent work. Malvina Hoffmann has also portrayed Pavlova in exquisite poise, and Alice Morgan Wright has attained marked success in "Boy and Peacock," which, though unfinished, shows finely decorative feeling and decided vigor of modeling. There are many garden figures, fountains, bird-baths, gate-posts, and similar figures which are both original and appropriate.

Two women artists of note, the American portrait painter, Cecilia Beaux, and Mary Helen Carlisle, an English artist of note, occupied the Knoedler Galleries from April 26 to May 8. Among the portraits exhibited by Miss Beaux were the familiar portrait of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt and her daughter, an interesting character study called "Harriet," and a pleasingly free and direct painting of "Ernesta," the artist's niece, Miss Ernesta Drinker, whom she has painted many times from childhood on, and who appears now at about eighteen. Miss Carlisle's exhibition consists of paintings of famous gardens in Scotland and Ireland, and is similar to the exhibition held by this artist earlier in the season.

NEW PRINTS AT THE LIBRARY

The customary annual exhibition of "recent additions" has been opened by the Prints Division of the New York Public Library, in the Stuart Gallery (room 316), of the main library building.

This year, three large groups dominate the exhibit—a noteworthy addition to the Avery Collection, made by Mr. Samuel P. Avery, the gifts and bequests of the late Mrs. Henry Draper, and the prints from the estate of the late Samuel Isham, the noted American artist and art critic. So many have been the additions that it is impossible for the library to show them all, but a finely representative lot has been placed on view, though in

Freckling and Sunburn can be Prevented

The Scientific Explanation

It is an established fact that sunlight is composed of rays of different colors, and amongst these are blue rays and violet rays. Whoever takes an interest in photography comes across these rays under the name of "actinic" rays, which produce the image on the sensitive photographic plate or film, in the same way as they also produce freckles, sun-stains or tan on the face, hands, or arms; and just as you can shut out these rays when you develop your film or plate, so can you also debar them from staining and browning the skin and complexion—by the new, wonderful preparation, Novena Sunproof Crème.

and Paris establishments, known as many famous beauties and women of highest rank in European courts.

"Maisons de Beauté Valaze"

Any one of these women who know, say to you if asked: "Madame Rubinstein? She simply has the secrets of beauty at her finger-tips." Not the least of these "secrets," but really the outcome of years of scientific study, is

Novena Sunproof Crème

By simply rubbing this preparation on the skin, before going out, you will not freckle or tan. You may enjoy all outdoor sports, even sea-bathing, with no fear of ill effect on the complexion. Above all, Novena Sunproof Crème is harmless, won't show on the face or grow hair, and forms a serviceable foundation for powder, which it is advisable to use. When Madame Rubinstein says that this preparation can prevent freckling and sunburn, she knows what this wonderful cream has done. Its effect is marvelous. $3.00 and $5.00 a pot; sample size $1.00.

Madame Rubinstein does not claim that this preparation will remove freckles or sunburn. It is a preventive, not a cure. If you carelessly allow these blemishes to appear, another of her famous beauty specialties is what you should use first. Its name is—

and it forms the key-note and one of the triumphs of her success as a Beauty Culturist. This master preparation removes the freckle pigment, dispels tan and sallowness by stimulating the skin texture and so insuring its clearness and radiance and freedom from threatening lines and wrinkles. $2.25 and $6.00 a pot—a size sufficient for six weeks' use, $1.25.

In case of excessive soreness from imprudent exposure to the sun, Baume Blanc should be used, and the face should be bathed with Valaze Skin-toning Lotion, Special. Baume Blanc, $1.50 a bottle. Valaze Skin-toning Lotion, Special, $2.00 a bottle.

"Comment se fait la Beauté"

a booklet whose English edition is called "Beauty in the Making," is a necessity to the fastidious woman. It is written by Madame Rubinstein, especially for those who are unable to come to her Maison de Beauté Valaze for treatment. In this booklet she has dealt in detail with every defect of the complexion and its prevention and relief through home treatment. It will be sent to you on receipt of 2 cents in stamps.

cases where a number of works by a given artist have been acquired a few only are shown.

The Avery gift includes etchings by Guerard, Manet, J. Foxcroft Cole, Buhot, G. A. Hoffmann, Flameng, and Koepping; drawings by Buhot, Bracquemond, Pissarro, Daubigny, and Seymour Haden; lithographs by Legros, Detaille, Millet ("The Sower"), and Raffaelli; Josey's mezzotint of Whistler's painting of his mother; and F. S. King's engraving of the "Book-Plate of the Printer's Devil."

From Mrs. Draper have come seventy-nine etchings by Haig, the set of Pennell's views of New York, and works by a number of well-known contemporary etchers; lithographs by Berthon, Kallmorgen, and Volkert; drawings by Pennell and Haig; stipple engravings by Bartolozzi, and others. The prints from the collection of the late Samuel Isham cover a wide range of styles and methods and reflect a catholic taste. Some etchings by Heinrich Wolff, who uses the roulette as an independent tool, are the gift of Mr. Atherton Curtis, of Paris. Many other works of note have been contributed to the library collection, but this summary gives an idea of the exhibition.

In addition to these more or less temporary benefits, the city has recently been permanently enriched by the unveiling of the beautiful Straus memorial fountain, designed by Augustus Lukeman and erected in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Straus, who lost their lives in the Titanic disaster.

Mr. Lukeman has met here the difficult problem of a monument in a small park surrounded by towering buildings,—a situation in which height could give nothing of impressiveness to the memorial. He has wisely selected a scheme in which all the emphasis is upon the horizontal lines and even the figure reclines instead of rising to challenge comparison with the surrounding height.

There is about this memorial fountain a dignity and serene beauty, an entire absence of effort or striving for effect, which place it among the finest of the monuments which have been erected in New York. The architectural setting of gray granite, on a design of extreme simplicity and rubbed to a soft dull polish is an excellent foil for the bronze figure of "Memory,"—considerably over life-size,—looking out over the water, lost in thought so deep that every muscle of the body is relaxed and life seems concentrated in the serene head and the supporting hands.

As is characteristic of Mr. Lukeman's work, the treatment is broad, straightforward, and simple; there is no insistence upon detail and no hint of prettiness. The unconventional pose is clearly understood and convincingly rendered, the modeling firm and sensitive, and the resulting beauty is of finely monumental quality.

In the small park at Broadway and One Hundred and Sixth Street, which has been named Straus Park, was recently unveiled a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Straus, designed by Augustus Lukeman

No. 106, $97. Horseshoe brooch; diamond, set in platinum; with eleven pearls, graded. (Value in accidental origin about $900.)

THESE beautiful specimens of pearl jewelry are not priced from $75 upwards, but may be had at the figures noted.

Nevertheless, they are as wonderful as pearls can be. They are genuine. They are from the shell of the oyster, and with one exception, are the same as any others in quality, color, size and purity.

These pearls come from the premeditated inoculation of the oyster, while the expensive pearls come from accidental inoculation of the oyster. A wave casts a grain of sand possibly into the oyster.

No. 504, $15.

Platinum bezel; large oyster; five-grain pearl. (Value in accidental origin about $125.)

No. 308, $20. Set with 6½ gr. pearl. (Value in accidental origin about $210.) Black enamel rim.

Now, will you pay ten times these prices for an accident, or will you take these at these extraordinary prices in this—the month of pearls? P. O. money order, or jewels sent on approval.

THE MIDINETTE WITH EMPTY HANDS

fashions would always be superior to American ones because of the midinettes. "America," he said, "will never create fashions, because she can not get working girls like ours. Ah, they are wonderful—so thrifty, so industrious, such artists!—so spontaneous, so saucy, so absolutely absorbed in their work. Why even the little errand girl does not consider matching samples a tedious chore. It is a delight to her, since it gives her the opportunity of showing her taste."

This same couturier told of his visits to some American dressmaking establishments. He had gone through large, well-ventilated, perfectly equipped work-rooms, yet he emerged aghast. "Do you know," he said, "that in those rooms everything was silent? There was not a laugh, not a joyous cry, not a spontaneous gesture. Like so many machines sat women, bent over their work, fashioning materials with the serious concentration of a statistician calculating the city death rate."

On the contrary, the delight of the little French girls in their work, in the fabrics they handle, is intense. They experience physical thrills at the sight of a beautiful piece of material or at a particularly fine bit of sewing. A little modiste once confessed that she became "actually intoxicated and quite bewildered" if surrounded by filmy evening dresses, and sometimes a worn little midinette has been caught imprinting a kiss upon the white splendor of a wedding gown.

These girls are strange studies in psychology. Always in touch with materials and fashions that are the most sumptuous and the most tasteful, the midinettes acquire a sense of harmony and an appreciation of values which is not surpassed by any class of women in the world. Yet, far from being poisoned by envy or regret because they can not have what so many women are enjoying as a matter of course, they are satisfied, apparently, with providing others with beautiful things. Quite unconsciously, their love of beauty finds its outlet in their work, and they are no more jealous of the possessors of wonderful gowns than the artist is of the owner of the picture he paints.

FAIRY STORY CUSTOMERS

The interest with which the midinettes follow the customers whose names they may know, but with whom, of course, they never come in contact, is quite touching. American customers, curiously enough, are especially favored, and are very popular. Perhaps this is because most of the American women who are pleased with their gowns, often think of sending a box of candy to the atelier.

Or, perhaps, Americans excite curiosity because they come from over the sea. It may be that there is the lure of the unknown, of the fairy tale, about the Americans. At any rate, Mrs. Vanderbilt, for instance, is often spoken of with real affection and familiarity by girls whose very existence she is ignorant of, but who feel they have real interest in her, since they make the things she wears. Many other Americans, too, are favorites with the midinettes, and as the little working girls catch a glimpse of the family names in the society columns, there is invariably a happy exclamation. "The dress we made for her," they say when they see the description of the successful gown worn at the ball, the opera, or the races.

WHAT, THEN, FOR THE MIDINETTES?

All this was the normal condition in times of peace. Now the laughter of the atelier has died out. In fact, in most cases, there is little left of the atelier itself. Some establishments have closed entirely, and it is doubtful if they will reopen for some time. A few establishments have retained their entire force, but have cut salaries. Whenever there has been a chance to do so even at the most miserable salary, the girls have remained at their work.

"We want to show the foreigners that we French are still working," the girls say, "we want our models to be so beautiful that they will cry out to all the world that the French spirit is alive and powerful."

Many of the midinettes have remained at their posts, even though the wages scarcely pay car-fare. Thousands are without work, and the various relief organizations, where the unemployed make dolls, bandages, shirts, knapsacks, or whatever else happens to be needed and may be sold, are now feeling the strain and are gradually closing. Resources can not last forever, and even the pittance paid for such emergency work amounts to large sums when it has to be paid continually, for months, and soon there will be an end to it. In the soup kitchens, the lack of funds is everywhere apparent; the soup is growing less nourishing and the meat slices are growing thinner. So before long, either the soup kitchens or the relief shops will have to be closed.

What then, is to become of the midinette? The state, as a rule, is under no obligation to her. Sisters or mothers of soldiers are not entitled to any contribution from the state, even though brothers and sons have supported the family before they went to war. Technically, there is the secours de chômage for the unemployed, but very few of the girls receive it.

Elizabeth Arden

How to Preserve

Youthful Beauty

It is not a matter to take lightly. Elizabeth Arden says, when the mirror shows that your face is at last giving way to tiny little lines, or that your complexion, which has won for you more than one compliment, is—well—not what it used to be, or (worse still) that the chin and throat, formerly delicately curved, are now too generously proportioned.

The woman who observes these signs, should consult Elizabeth Arden at once; neglect will deepen the faint lines into wrinkles, and sallowness will supplant the former natural coloring, and the further development of the contour will rapidly and surely bring the prominent, unsightly double chin.

The Venetian Strapping Muscle Treatment, by which the delicate tissues and muscles which compose the entire supporting framework of the contour are strengthened when in a weakened, sagging condition, and lifted to their natural position, smoothing and firming the contour, is supreme for results. Treatments in courses or singly at the Arden Salon D'Oro, which has become an institution in the eyes of every well-groomed New York woman and today is serving the largest exclusive clientele.

The following VENETIAN PREPARATIONS used at home will maintain the skin all summer in a marvelously fresh, youthful, healthy condition.

Exercises for Women

A NEW BOOK JUST PUBLISHED

Most women are very definitely in need of some sort of simple and suitable exercise that can be done in the home, without apparatus, if necessary. This new book by Florence Bolton, A.B., formerly Director of Women's Gymnasium, Stanford University, outlines and pictures an excellent series of plain, practical exercises, adapted to meet the peculiar requirements of women. The combination of different exercises includes many for reducing flesh; and others bound to result in the securing and preservation of a full, rounded, graceful figure.

Physical Grace and Power

The book should be useful to Physicians in prescribing exercises for their patients, to teachers of gymnastics for class and private work, to the college woman who has left gymnasium days behind, and to EVERY WOMAN, EVERYWHERE, who desires PHYSICAL GRACE AND POWER and the mental satisfaction consequent upon both.

The Dress Problem Solved

For the Woman who Personally Shops in New York

If you are accustomed to pay $50 or more for gowns that satisfy you—if you would like to achieve the same results and enjoy the same dress distinction for just about half that sum—this shop surely will interest you.

Here we offer only model gowns—garments fashioned by the master fashion designers of the world. They were shown on forms, but never worn, and are sold for half what you would usually expect to pay for their exclusive style and tailoring in most other shops.

Our display of summer frocks is a revelation to our patrons; many of them the advance styles. Hundreds of New York's best dressed women owe the success of their toilettes to this modest little shop. Then, too, you are sure of exclusive models when you buy here. No two of our gowns are alike.

If you can wear model sizes—if you live in New York, or if you shop in New York, you should come here. Spend the money you intended putting into one gown, by coming here and buying two—Parisian to the smallest detail, and wholly satisfying to the very last time you wear them.

For Street, Afternoon and Evening Wear

Prices Range $10-$50

MANY SELECTED MODELS $60-$125

No Catalogs—No Approval Shipments. No inquiries answered over 50 miles from New York.

The lingerie gowns, so dainty with their hand embroidery and lace, are a revelation. They have an undeniable charm this season. Their prices range $15-$50.

Some exquisite blouses—French models, and no two alike, $5 to $12. Their values range from $9 to $22.

Call and see these gowns or blouses for yourself—even try them on. You are never urged to buy. New consignments received almost every week.

KAFFEE HAG

CAFFEINE-FREED COFFEE

NOT A SUBSTITUTE

You will probably notice that Kaffee HAG is stronger than ordinary coffee because the green bean is cleaned and refined at the same time that the drug caffeine is removed.

Years ago people used crude brown sugar — nobody would think of using it on the table today.

And now, the discriminating demand refined coffee—Kaffee HAG is not only cleaned or refined, but with the nerve destroying and stomach disturbing drug caffeine removed, it is a perfectly safe beverage for everybody.

ALL OF THE DELIGHTS—NONE OF THE REGRETS

If your dealer cannot supply Kaffee HAG, send twenty-five cents and a package will be sent postpaid.

The NEW LOCOMOBILE

The Fine Vehicle has always distinguished the Fine Family. The New Locomobile, with its beautiful low lines and Over One Hundred Refinements, has an air of distinction that makes it the car of cars to express family standing.

Miss Elsie de Wolfe, the leading authority in design and decoration, famous for her unerring good taste, has become associated with the Locomobile Company, and her influence will extend to the decorative treatment of Closed Car interiors.

To those who wish bodies built to order, our Custom Body Department, a unique feature, has special facilities for executing exceptionally beautiful designs.

The New Locomobile exhibits Over One Hundred Refinements. The Body is lower and the Running Boards are lower. The extra wide rear doors, combined with the low step, afford great ease of entrance and exit. A closed motor bonnet with increased slope. New cowl. New Windshield with movable upper glass and movable lower curved glass. Electric refinements. Carbureter refinements. Enclosed motor valves. New Multiple Dry Disc Clutch. More complete noiselessness. More luxurious upholstery than ever.

No other high grade car combines all the following points of excellence: Four Speeds; Multiple Dry Disc Clutch; Low Easy Step; Left Drive with Center Control; Tires at the Rear; Clear Running Boards; Closed Motor Bonnet; One-Piece Mudguards; "Touch the Button to start"; Full Floating Rear Axle; Distance Rods; Rear Springs Shackled at Both ends; a car that is mechanically and electrically locked; Brakes that will stop the car in an emergency instead of simply slowing it down.
